Our Special Educational Number

This will be issued on January 18, and will as usual contain a large amount of information peculiarly suitable for those engaged in scholastic work, notes on forthcoming educational books, reviews of new volumes, &c., &c. Every endeavour, in short, will be made to render it of interest to the heads of schools and colleges and of practical value to the Trade. As in former years, copies will be sent to all the large educational establishments of the United Kingdom, and to many in the Colonies and on the Continent.

In addition to above, we have also arranged to send this Special Number to over Two Thousand of the Principal Libraries in the Empire.

Advertisements should be sent as soon as possible, addressed to the Manager of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C., and endorsed 'Educational Number.'

NOTICE.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR is published every Saturday, and can be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son's Railway Bookstalls and of the principal Newsagents in London and the Provinces.

Communications relating to the Literary Department, Books for Review, &c., must be addressed to the Editor of THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, E.C.

The Editor will be glad to receive Notes of Changes and of other matters interesting to the Trade generally.

Correspondents are requested to write on one side of the paper only, and give their real names and addresses, not necessarily as signatures to their letters, but as a guarantee of good faith. Unless this rule be adhered to, no notice will be taken of such communications.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money payments should be made.

January 3, 1902.

ANOTHER 'BACON' TRAGEDY.

Since the appearance of the notice of Mrs. Elizabeth Wells Gallup's 'Bi-Literal Cypher of Francis Bacon,' in the January number of the Nineteenth Century and After, we have read another work given out as by her, though we believe it is the concoction of her employer, Orville W. Owen, of Detroit. It is called 'The Tragedy of Anne Boleyn: a Cipher Drama,' 'found in the works of Sir Francis Bacon and deciphered by Mrs. E. W. Gallup.' Copyright is claimed for it by V. King Moore, 1901, and 'all rights are reserved.' It is a more stupendous piece of impudence than even 'Bacon's' Homer. Anyone who read Mr. Sidney Lee's letter in the Times of Dec. 20, 1901, will be shocked to hear that 'Orville W. Owen' and Mrs. Gallup quote his articles in the 'Dictionary of National Biography' as 'corroborating their discoveries.' Mr. Lee says that about two years ago he most carefully examined the First Folio of Shakespeare's Plays and Burton's 'Anatomy of Melancholy,' and the other books by Spenser, Peele, Greene, Marlowe, &c., and finds it impossible to extract legitimately a cipher, because it is not there to extract. Since then Mrs. Gallup has deciphered this 'Tragedy of Anne Boleyn.' (It is a mercy for Mrs. Gallup that she did not make these 'discoveries' when Queen Elizabeth was alive, or she would certainly have experienced a tragedy in her own person.) In this work Shakespeare, or 'Bacon,' is made to plagiarise his own published plays. Here is a specimen, taken from the end of the precious 'tragedy.' Anne Boleyn, Queen of Henry VIII., is supposed to be speaking just before her head was cut off 'by a sword of Spain,' and asks her hearers to tell the King she has commended to his goodness their child Elizabeth:—

The model of our chaste loves his young daughter,—
The dews of heaven fall thick in blessings on her,— Beseeching him to give her virtuous breeding—
I hope she will deserve well—and a little
To love her for her mother's sake, that lov'd him Heaven knows how dearly. I thank you all, pray for me.

The words in italic are Mrs. Gallup's; the others are taken out of the mouth of Queen Katharine (see Shakespeare's 'Henry VIII.,' Act iv., Scene 2). The effrontery of the whole story is increased by the statement that 'Bacon' made use in this 'Tragedy' of matter he had already published in the plays, and whole passages are taken from them.

No wonder Mrs. Gallup adds 'Pray for me.'

Not only is practically the whole of this precious new drama concocted out of the acknowledged works of Shakespeare, but Mrs. Gallup has made Shakespeare, i.e. 'Bacon,' not only plagiarise but also Bowdlerise himself. For instance, the witty but extremely coarse conversation between the Old Lady and Anne Boleyn in Shakespeare's 'Henry VIII.' is made to do duty on p. 39 of this pretended new tragedy by him with all the wit and coarseness cut out.

Mrs. Gallup is very fond of italic type. Why did she not print in italic the new lines in this new tragedy, instead of saying that much of the work will be recognised by the reader as being taken from the published dramas of Shakespeare? She did not do so because it would have shown at once that the only new lines are those by which she hangs together those she takes from the published works of Shakespeare.

The whole thing is so transparently a concoction that a schoolboy who was reading this deciphered tragedy asked: 'Was Bacon a Yankee? he spells words like "labour" and "honour" without the "u."'

And Mrs. Gallup asks the world to believe Bacon wrote this 'new drama' in order to vindicate the 'honor' of his Grandmother.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

With the first number for the new year The Nineteenth Century and After appears for the first time with the edges cut on the top as well as on the side and foot.

We understand that Messrs. Gay & Bird are having quite a run on Mrs. Gallup, and no wonder, with the Times and other papers full every day of 'Bacon-Shakespeare.' Our private belief is that Mrs. Gallup is just roaring up her sleeve all the time—only she should not have claimed 'absolute veracity' for her huge impositions.

'The Woodlands Orchids' is a description of the famous collection formed by Mr. Measures at Streatham, written by Mr. Frederick Boyle and provided with sixteen coloured plates by Mr. J. L. Macfarlane, F.R.H.S. The work is a considerable one, for Mr. Boyle diversifies his catalogue with numerous stories of orchid-hunting, a pursuit more romantic than gold-prospecting in a new country. The book is published by Messrs. Macmillan.

M. Anatole France is contributing to the Revue de Paris for January 1 an article on the 'Siege of Orleans (1428-1429).' Another interesting article in the same number will be on the 'Military School at Frederiksborg,' by Prince Jean of Orleans, the Duke of Guise. A second instalment will be given of some early letters of Renan, and among the other contents will be 'L'Hygiène de Paris,' by M. Paul Strauss; 'Siegfried,' by M. Romain Rolland; and 'Au Pays des Jouets,' by Marcelle Tinayre. Mr. T. Fisher Unwin is the English publisher.

The Antiquary for January will contain Papers on 'Some Essex Brasses,' by Miller Christy; 'The Heart of Queen Anne Boleyn,' by Sir W. Hastings D'Oyley, Bart.; 'Ancient Egyptian Beads and Symbols,' by R. Coltman Clepham, and 'The Old Scottish Aristocracy,' by J. A. Lovat-Fraser.

The author of 'Mademoiselle Mori' has translated a series of papers on 'Insect Life' from J. H. Fabre's 'Souvenirs of a Naturalist.' The extraordinary engineering operations of the sacred beetle, the murderous tactics of predatory insects such as the wasp that feeds on crickets or the praying mantis that devours wasps, are described with the contagious enthusiasm of a born observer. Dramas that go on in the grass under our feet are recounted with an exhilarating glee that should make the book a delightful present for any man, woman, or child with a taste for Natural History. Messrs. Macmillan, the publishers, in introducing the work of the great French naturalist to the ordinary reading public, have provided it with numerous illustrations by Mr. M. Prendergast Parker.

Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish next week an historical study in American diplomacy by James Horton Callahan, entitled 'Cuba and International Relations.'

Two new serials are begun in Temple Bar for January: 'Lavinia,' by Rhoda Broughton, a story of to-day; and 'The Bonnet Conspirators,' by V. A. Simpson, dealing with the time when there were still plots on behalf of the great Napoleon, in England as well as in France. Among the miscellaneous papers are an 'appreciation' of Kate Greenaway, 'A Griffin Journeying,' by Mrs. Cameron; some of the humours of 'Irish Clerics,' by Canon Staveley; a criticism of the 'Gilbertian Libretto,' by G. H. Powell; and a discussion of 'Feminine Types,' by Arthur Hopd. The complete stories include 'The Rescue of the Princess,' 'The Wolf of the Zwaatuggens,' and 'The Emigré.'

The serial story which begins with the New Year in the Queen Newspaper is entitled 'Margaret Vincent.' It is the work of Mrs. W. K. Clifford, author of 'Mrs. Keith's Crime' &c.

Next week Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish Mrs. Alexander's new novel, 'The Yellow Fiend.'

The continued demand for Mr. Charles Godfrey Leland's practical book on 'The Will, and How to Develop and Strengthen it,' has led to the issue of a second and enlarged edition, containing as a supplement the correspondence between Kant, the German philosopher, and Hüfeland, the physician, regarding the cure of disease by the will, in which both were agreed. Mr. Philip Wellby is the publisher.

The same publisher announces another work by Mr. Leland, entitled 'Flaxius, or Leaves from the Life of an Immortal,' in which will be found several new 'Breitmann Ballads.' The work is of a fantastic or humorous character.

The circular of the West India Committee announces that the Prince of Wales has graciously accepted with thanks a copy of Mr. H. de R. Walker's recently published book, 'The West Indies and the Empire.'

Messrs. Nelson & Sons intimate that owing to the large demand for their 'New Century Library' edition of the 'Poetical Works of Robert Burns,' they find it will be impossible to publish the limp leather edition until the beginning of the New Year.

Mr. Alfred Hodder's novel 'The New American,' published by the Macmillan Company, conveys by its title that the author considers the people whom he portrays to be the most perfected specimens of the evolving breed, and their conduct, which includes, besides the control of newspapers, a good deal of shooting, stabbing, and other violence, to be the typical conduct of the race that is to dominate the world.

Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co. publish a brochure entitled 'The Old Bible and the New: a Review of Prof. G. A. Smith's "Modern Criticism and the Preaching of the Old Testament."' This attempt to combat the views of Prof. Smith has been prepared by 'a Committee of Ministers and Elders' and ought to be read by all who have read the professor's iconoclastic work.

In the current number of the Lady's Realm an interesting account is given by Sarah A. Tooley of the Queen's pets at Sandringham, with all of which the writer appears to be familiar. Horses, dogs, bantams, doves are described in detail, and various incidents regarding them related.

A FRENCH TRAVELLER ON OLD AND NEW CHINA.*

There have been and happily still are publishing firms whose imprint is a guarantee for the worth of their publications. If this be true of other countries, it is certainly so of France, and above all of Paris, where one of these firms is Librairie Armand Colin, whose name and fame is well maintained by M. Weulersse in the work before us. From the first page, where he describes his arrival at Hong Kong, until the last, the reader's interest is never allowed to flag. He is soon absorbed in the perusal of a succession of picturesque descriptions or—not less, interesting because intelligent and brief—reflections. 'Hong Kong,' he says, 'is neither pretty nor pleasant. It tires one; but it is an heroic city. Everything there savours of man's effort to surmount natural difficulties, and of his triumph. In such a city there is no room for what is trivial, summary, or provisional; everything must be solid, definite, and grand. This it is which gives to Victoria its air of being a capital, "an imperial city"! He speaks warmly of English comfort there, "sometimes luxurious, but never useless." Of Canton we read that "In the handsome French Catholic Cathedral, built of Chinese granite and marble, the only note of colour that relieves the naked stone is given by the enormous spitoons of green earthenware at the end of each bench in the nave, for the converted Chinaman still smokes and spits!" The voyage from Canton to Macao offers many opportunities for picturesque description, of which the author skilfully takes advantage. He contrasts the polychrome arcades and balustraded terraces of Macao itself, as viewed from the sea, beneath the blue sky and the bright sunshine, with the mournful aspect of the city as seen from within, with its deserted, sleepy-looking, narrow, tortuous streets, paved with cobble-stones. "Macao is full of monks and makes a show of its soldiers. But they are really only parade soldiers . . . there are two hundred of them. Macao is defended by seven forts; that is, scarcely thirty men to man each fort, let alone to guard the prisoners. And such old forts! Most of the guns are of bronze. Macao could not hold out one hour against a serious attack! . . . The commercial decay of Macao is not so complete but is as irremediable as its military downfall. . . . The Chinese and not the Portuguese keep Macao alive." An amusing incident is the visit paid by the author and some other foreigners to a Buddhist monastery, the guide being the chief bonze, whose English was limited to four phrases. When he wished the visitors to rest a while he surprised them by saying in pidgin-English, 'Sit dong!' Then, desiring to hasten their progress, he shouted: 'Come along!' At the end of their inspection, after having insisted by gestures on the author reading the visitors' book through from beginning to end, with all the names, appreciations, and poems, the bonze ejaculated his third English, or rather American phrase, 'One dollar!' As he showed his visitors out he called their attention to a dry waterfall by uttering his fourth and last English phrase: 'No water!' The account of Shanghai, with its English and French concessions and contrasts, gives a striking if not quite pleasant picture of Europeo-Chinese city life and customs. To this picture of town life succeeds a moving panorama of a trip on the Yangtze-Kiang from Shanghai to Hankow. At Ouhou the writer fell in with an American lady, who said of the missionaries: 'Oh! our missionaries are a rotten lot! They are not sincere. They only try to do business and to live well; villas, carriages, holidays in the hills and in Japan; they refuse nothing! The French priests are not like that, they are honest. They don't go away half a mile from the town to be more comfortable. There they are at the gates of the pagan city, always at work, and always in danger.' And (he goes on to say) 'this lady told me of the terrible riot of 1891, when the Catholic mission was burnt to the ground, and the English Consul had only time to escape through his garden dressed as a Chinese. From Hankow our author descended the Yangtze to Nankin and Tchinkiang. The author visited Tsintan, where he was struck by the enormous progress made by the Germans during the three years they have possessed that piece of China, which, he says, is destined to become, ere long, the principal centre for the foreign trade of all Changtung, owing to its magnificent harbour, on the construction of which neither labour nor expense are being spared. The climate is splendid, and the air bracing; so the Germans are building a town intended as a seaside resort, well laid out with wide streets and roads, every house standing in its own garden. The business town lies to the north-west, and contains only grand warehouses and stores. This chapter on Tsintan should be read by everyone interested in foreign trade. It forms the seventh and last chapter of the First or descriptive Part of M. Weulersse's work.

* Chine ancienne et nouvelle: Impressions et Réflexions. Par G. Weulersse, Agrégé d'histoire et de géographie. Boursier de Voyage de l'Université de Paris. Paris: Librairie Armand Colin. 1902.

The Second Part consists of five chapters. The first treats of the natural and industrial resources of China; labour; low wages; qualities and defects of the Chinese workman, his inferiority in productiveness and technical knowledge. The author is not disposed to over-rate the Yellow Peril, rather looking upon it as a phantom. But this chapter gives so much carefully verified information on the subject, that the reader is able to form his own opinion as to the danger to Europe of Chinese competition; at any rate he will find himself well posted as to China's resources after having perused it. The second chapter, on education, is no less important and equally interesting. The third chapter is a frank admission that the want of success of France in China is due to French ignorance! Let England take warning. The fourth chapter deals with the causes of the Boxer rising last year. These were: the action of the missionaries, the construction of railways and telegraphs, which excited the fears of the provincial mandarins and governors that their independent action would soon have to submit to the control of the Emperor and his reforming advisers; foreign annexations; the weakening of English influence (which our author admits has benefited China) owing to the protracted Boer war; the drought of 1900; and last, but not least, popular superstition, which the Boxers worked to their own profit. In the fifth and last chapter the author, after sketching the present state of China, its national party, statesmen, rising generation, and army, recommends a policy of watching and waiting on the part of the great Powers. He then considers the possible eventuality of a partition of China, which he most strongly condemns. This work, so brightly and tersely written, ought to have a very wide circulation and merits careful study on the part of all who take an interest in the welfare of that ancient, remarkable, and colossal state—the Celestial Empire.

WHOLESALE BOOKSELLERS AND STATIONERS' SECTION.

THE BOARD OF TRADE OF THE CITY OF TORONTO.

Secretary's Office, Toronto:

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—I have before me a copy of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR—No. 1849—Dec. 7, 1901, and on page 600 of your valued journal, 3rd column, I find, under display headings, what purports to be an account of a meeting of the Section of which I have the honour to be Secretary-Treasurer. I regret exceedingly that your columns should have been made the medium for the publication of a report that is most unfair and injurious, and it is needless for me to say (I speak as an Englishman by birth and education) that I am quite sure that your columns have been used entirely without your consent; and further that when the truth of the matter is placed before you you will not begrudge your valued space to set the matter right before your readers and do common justice to all concerned. Without comment, I send herewith for your information the following:—

- (1) Copy of my letter to the Editor of the Toronto Evening News of November 25.

[This is a letter to complain of the insertion of the account given in the Toronto Evening News of November 21, 1901, from which it was made to appear that Canadian publishers want to reprint works of British authors without their consent. This 'report' we gave in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR for December 7, 1901. It will be seen that Mr. Wills describes this report as 'misleading and untruthful,' and of course, that being so, we much regret it was published by us.—Ed. P.C.]

- (2) Copy of reply received from Mr. Hocken (who I understand is Acting Editor of the Evening News) on same date.

[This is a reply from Mr. Hocken, of the Toronto Evening News, saying the writer of the report in question had instantly 'received notice'—we presume of dismissal.—Ed. P.C.]

- (3) Copy of my letter to Mr. Wm. Douglas, Manager and Editor of the Evening News, of November 27, 1901.

[In this letter, Mr. Wills asks for a public apology for the insertion of the misleading report.—Ed. P.C.]

- (4) Copy of a statement which appeared in the Evening News, November 30, 1901.

[This is merely a short report of the Booksellers' and Stationers' meeting on November 22, the only part of interest in connection with copyright being the following.—Ed. P.C.:—In connection with the Copyright Laws, a deputation from the Section and the Master Printers' and Bookbinders' Association waited upon the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Justice some months ago, to make representations regarding the Imperial legislation on the copyright question then pending in England. It was resolved that the deputation be requested to report at an early date to a joint meeting of this Section of the Toronto Board of Trade and the Master Printers' and Bookbinders' Association as to what action, if any, had been taken by the Government in the matter.]

- (5) Copy of my second letter to Mr. Douglas of December 2, 1901.

[In this letter Mr. Wills, on behalf of the Wholesale Booksellers' and Stationers' Section of the City of Toronto Board of Trade, complains that the insertion of this report of the meeting of November 21, and giving it as held on the 22nd, is in no sense a retraction or correction of the statement complained of.—Ed. P.C.]

- (6) Copy of Mr. Hocken's letter to me of December 2, 1901.

[In this Mr. Hocken, of the Toronto Evening News, says if Mr. Wills will tell him exactly what he wants published he will 'consider it.'—Ed. P.C.]

- (7) Copy of Minutes of the meeting of the Section held on November 21, 1901, in the Council Chamber of the Board of Trade of this City.

[This is a copy of the Minutes of Section Meeting, Nov. 21, 1901, 3 P.M. Present: Messrs. W. J. Gage, J. F. Ellis, G. M. Morang, D. A. Rose, W. P. Gundy, Geo. Spence, Atwell Fleming, G. R. Warwick, R. Carswill, Richard Brown.

Mr. W. J. Gage in the chair.

The only minute referring to Copyright is the following:

'Re Copyright:

Moved by Mr. Atwell Fleming,

Seconded by Mr. J. F. Ellis,

"That whereas a deputation from the Wholesale Booksellers' and Stationers' Section of the Board of Trade and the Master Printers' and Bookbinders' Association waited upon the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Justice some months ago, to make representations regarding the Imperial legislation on Copyright question then pending in England;

"And whereas we have no knowledge of what action, if any, has been taken, by the Canadian Government upon the subject;

"Therefore, be it resolved, that the deputation be asked to report at an early date to a joint meeting of this Section of the Board of Trade and the Master Printers' and Bookbinders' Association as to what action, if any, has been taken by the Government in the matter."—Carried.

[It will be seen that the report published originally in the Toronto Evening News of November 21, was an imaginary one! The meeting only took place at 3 the same afternoon.—Ed. P.C.]

In doing this I beg to certify that each and every one of the copies herewith furnished you are true and accurate, and I can but feel sure that your sense of justice will prompt you to do what the Manager and Editor of the Evening News has failed to do, and give the great trade interests, which I have the honour to represent, fair play and justice. If it is necessary I will supplement these copies with a sworn affidavit.

With the utmost respect,

I am, dear Sir,

Yours truly,

EDGAR A. WILLS,

Secretary.

[We are glad to publish this correspondence, as it shows our Canadian publishing friends are not so wicked as the Toronto Evening News made them out to be.—Ed. P.C.]

THE ALTERATIONS IN THE PRAYER BOOK.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—If the authorities who are responsible for the alterations in the 'Book of Common Prayer' would study the interests of the publishers and retailers of that book, why could not the Royal Family be prayed for after this fashion: 'His most gracious Majesty the King, the Queen Consort, and all the Royal Family'?

This form would in all probability stand good for at least three generations.

I make this suggestion with all due respect to all the royal personages therein included, and as a loyal citizen; but the loss incurred by booksellers is now becoming serious. We have on sale three editions, and buyers in most cases say: 'Oh, I must have the newest edition.'

From what I know of our Royal Family I believe they have the welfare of their humble tradesmen at heart as much as of any other class of their loyal subjects.

BOOKSELLER.

Bournemouth.

BUSINESS CUSTOM AS TO GIVING NOTICE TO LEAVE.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—Will you or some of the many readers of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, including business men and assistants in our trade, say if when leaving a situation it is the rule to give a month's notice on either side, no matter if paid weekly or monthly?

I myself, with eighteen years' experience, have always had (or given) a month's notice when leaving a situation. I gave a month's notice last week to my present employer, and was told the limit time was two weeks in our trade. If this is so assistants must be careful, when applying for a berth, to stipulate for a month's notice on either side.

If I am wrong I shall be only too pleased to own to it.

Yours truly,

B. WILLINGTON.

Dec. 29, 1901.

[We believe it is usual to give a week's notice on either side if the salary is paid weekly and a month if it is paid monthly; but, of course, it may depend on the arrangement made when the berth is filled.—Ed.]

THACKERAY SKETCHES IN THE JANUARY NUMBER OF THE 'CORNHILL MAGAZINE.'

The January number of the Cornhill comes with edges ready trimmed; it is an excellent number, and the illustrated Thackeray article by General J. R. Wilson is of quite exceptional interest, and is pretty certain to carry the number into a second edition.

Here is an amusing letter from Thackeray on his return from the States; it was addressed to Mr. W. D. Robinson:

W. M. T. AND THE 'SOBER-WATER.'

Brompton London) May 9 [1856]

'We did pass the bar, and didn't I have a good dinner at the Adelphi, and wasn't I glad to get back to town yesterday, and wasn't there a great dinner at the Garrick Club (the Annual Shakespeare dinner w^h ought to have come off on the 23d. ult. but was put off on acc^t of a naval review) and didn't I make a Yankee speech, and oh lor' Robinson! haven't I got a headache this morning? I'm ashamed to ask for a sober-water that's the fact.—And so here's the old house, the old room, the old teapot by my bedside, the old trees nodding in at the window—it looks as if I'd never been away—and that it is a dream I have been making. Well, in my dream I dreamt there was an uncommonly good fellow by name W D R. and I dreamt that he treated me with all sorts of kindness, and I send him and J C B D.¹ and D D.² (and what's L's name downstairs?³) my heartiest regards; and when my young women come home I shall tell them what a deal of kindness their Papa had across the water. So good bye, my dear Robinson & believe me always gratefully yours

'W M T.

About a dozen of Thackeray's own sketches are given, and an unpublished portrait of him by Count d'Orsay.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR'S ANNUAL RÉSUMÉ OF THE NUMBER OF BOOKS PUBLISHED IN THE PAST YEAR.

The books of 1900 showed a fall of nearly 500 in number compared with 1899, and the books of 1901 show a further fall of about a thousand, which number would have been larger but for the great quantity of new fiction issued during the last two months of 1901. In 1900 new novels issued in November and December numbered 813 and 95; in 1901 they numbered 372 and 125 respectively. The total number of new novels published in 1900 was 1,563; in 1901 it was 1,513, only fifty fewer. Poetry shows a fall of more than a hundred. Of new works on voyages and travels the number is precisely the same as in the previous year, but in reprints there is a fall of forty. In 1900 history and biography (including South African events, territories, races, and notabilities) composed one of the few classes which showed an increase; now it shows a decrease of nearly two hundred. An interesting list of books on South Africa and the war issued during 1901 fills nearly two columns in pages 552, 553 of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR for November 23 last.

WHAT MAKES A BOOK SELL IN AMERICA.

CUSTOMERS TO BE PLAYED AS WARILY
'AS A BROOK TROUT.'

A contributor to the New York Sun, who seems to have had an interest in the subject, recently interviewed a half-dozen booksellers in New York City, beginning down town at Leggat's, and pushing his inquiries northward to Dodd, Mead & Company's. The result of his interviews seems to point to the fact that the bookseller and the bookbuyer—one sometimes as much as the other—decide the fate of the book, as may be learned from some of the statements which we quote below:—

At Leggat's the inquirer was informed that 'in the retail stores where the counters are piled with fresh books the fortune of the lucky book and the fame of its author are both made. They depend largely on the mental decisions reached in a moment of time, and for the most part impulsively by the hundreds of thousands of American bookbuyers.'

The head salesman in the book department of one of the uptown department stores said: 'A large majority of customers don't know what they want when they come in. It is odd, but I find that the colour of the cover has a good deal to do with a decision in favour of a book. I mean as far as the decision can be affected by a strong first impression. Red is the most catchy cover, if it is the right shade, and then a nice shade of green. The gilt and the corner designs show up well on either red or green. Let a red or a green be standing erect among a group of other colours, and most people will pick up the bright strong colour first. The title makes a big difference with the undecided buyers. The pictures help some. The typography doesn't affect much unless the print is too small and the book too big. Then they say, "I can never wade through all that." The price, whether it is $1.50 or $1.25, makes very little difference. A previous interest in the author is of much account. And if one of his books has been dramatised and the buyers have seen the play all his other books have a fascination. Dramatising a book always helps its sale. We have had a revival, for instance, of interest, in a certain novel, although its sale had almost stopped.'

Advertising, according to this same authority, helps considerably. After a big display advertisement of a certain book in the Saturday papers, a special sale of that book is always counted upon on Monday.

Another found that 'women buy more books than men, and, as a rule, they know better what they want when they come in. Most women who buy books have a better sense of the literary value of a book than men as a class. Most men who come in go more by what others have said about a book, by outside influence, and also by what we say in recommending a book.'

Asked what led him to recommend one book rather than another, the salesman replied: 'Oh, a good many reasons. The chief reason I guess is that we like the book ourselves. We read nearly all the new novels, or at least read into them, and our young ladies have pretty good judgment. I don't mean to say that we go in to push certain books rather than others. But when we have a big stock of some one book, which we have bought because it is a fine and popular book, it's only natural that we take an interest in selling as many as we can. But we recommend other books, too, when we see a customer take an interest in them.'

At Brentano's the Sun's contributor was informed that 'most people don't know what they want to buy when they come in. Two-thirds of our sales are brought about by the salesmen.'

At Dodd, Mead & Company's, Mr. Avery, the head of the retail department, informed our authority that 'perhaps one in fifteen knows what book he will buy before he crosses the threshold. The others decide here. I can't specify any one cause that decides people upon a certain book before they come. Naturally, advertising and reviewing have some effect.

'Dramatisation does not seem to send people here after the original novel to any great extent. It did years ago with the "Prisoner of Zenda" and "The Little Minister." But it is too common now. But the little things don't seem to go for much. The colour of the cover and the design and the pictures seem to count but little. The open book of a page of type helps more. Yet if the book is popular it might be printed in minion and you could not stop its sale. The build of the book is not so significant in the competition, because books are all now so attractive. It is the salesman's judicious word that goes for most with the people who are trying to decide. It's our sole business to sell a customer what he will like best, and as much of that as we can. That's our sharp study, our customers' tastes. We haven't any possible prejudice for or against any novel to make us push it or refrain from pushing it.

'I think men use unquestionably more discrimination in buying than women.'

A Sixth Avenue bookseller was certain 'that the great majority of book purchases are decided on after the customer gets inside our door. Advertising does good, of course. If all of it should cease there would be a tremendous fall in book sales. Advertising and reviews and popular chat keep the fever up; they stimulate all the time. But with our class of people they don't produce definite decisions very often. No, it is in the store that they decide most of them. We watch them come in. We don't make ourselves too obtrusive—sometimes even a greeting would be too much for certain people who want to browse and get their own impressions. But we don't let the shy browser get out unspoken to. In getting an impression everything counts—the cover, the design, the pictures, the beautiful open type on rich thick paper—it all plays its part.

'While the habitual browser is lovingly fingering the pages, reading paragraphs and looking at the pictures, I hold my men off. I've often seen a customer walk right out when some fresh salesman came up too quickly with his fool remarks. But when we get at the customer fairly, then the fun begins. He is to be played with like a brook trout—that is, usually, for, while most are shy and gamy, there are some who can be hooked like a sunfish with a piece of red flannel. I stand there and listen while the man explains things to me which I've known since I was a child. If I let him give me enough information he will buy—not out of decency as a reward for patience, but because he is in good humour after his show. With nearly all customers the less we can say the better. But each remark must hook in with a flange. If a man buys a book which he likes he will take the credit to himself and come again, but if he gets a book that displeases him he will blame the salesman. . . .

'A good many people depend on us wholly. Men come in every day from their carriages and say "Give me something in my line." Yesterday a man did that, and when he saw me looking along to see what I had he exclaimed: "Oh, you haven't anything. I notice when you have a thing that strikes my taste you go and lay your hand on it." So you see that, naturally, when I have so much at stake in fitting books to customers as they are fitted with shoes, we can't have any prejudice regarding the books. When people pay us for their ignorance we have to be pretty conscientious.'

LAPSED COPYRIGHTS.

(Extracts from a letter signed 'F. G.' in Literature for December 28.)

'The prevalence of the reprints proves that a literary property often continues to be valuable long after the death of its creator; and I contend that the way in which the law of England (to say nothing of the law of any other country) deals with that property is not only unjust but illogical. Copyright is the literary man's equivalent for what the tradesman calls a "going business"; and a going business in history or poetry or philosophy or romance has just as strong a moral claim to protection, irrespectively of the duration of its founder's life, as a going business in jams or pills. If the property of men of letters is to be confiscated at all, ought it not to be confiscated by the State in the interest of the community? What happens at present is that, after a certain term of years, every work of genius is taken away from A, the author's heir or assignee, and flung to be scrambled for by B, C, D, &c., who happen at the time to be in business as publishers. They may alter it, abridge it, Bowdlerise it, bring it into contempt by ridiculous footnotes and introductions, and in fact do whatever they like with it. Of course the publishers are quite right, in the existing state of the law, to reprint the classics; and many of the reprints which they turn out are a credit to their enterprise and a boon to book-buyers. But this does not hinder the fact that the system which permits them to use dead men's property as capital to put into their businesses is a very queer kind of Collectivism. If Collectivist principles are to be applied to literary property at all, the only sound and rational mode of procedure would, it seems to me, be this—that when copyrights cease to be the property of the author, they should become the property of the State; that the administration of this property should be undertaken by one of the Government Departments—say, the Board of Works; that licenses to reprint should be granted to approved publishers who apply for them, subject to the payment of royalties to the Department. It is difficult to calculate what revenues these royalties could be made to yield.'

'VIEWS AND MEMORANDA OF PUBLIC LIBRARIES OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.'

This work, by Mr. Alfred Cotgreave, F.R.Hist.S., is published by The Library Aids Co., 166A Romford Road, Stratford, E., and also by Messrs. Truslove, Hanson & Comba, of London and New York. The author does not claim anything of a literary character for this book, but that as, owing to the munificence of many well-known gentlemen, such as Mr. J. Passmore Edwards and Mr. Thomas Greenwood (of the firm of Scott, Greenwood & Co.), and the public spirit of many corporations and local authorities, public libraries are springing up all over the country, such a work, the only one published of the kind, should be of considerable utility to library committees, librarians, architects, and all who are interested in these institutions. In arranging for the external appearance or planning of the various departments of a library, a work giving views and plans of many of the largest and most famous libraries, as also of smaller ones of every degree and kind, should prove helpful in many ways. There is also a very useful statistical table giving the income, work, hours, &c., of all the rate-supported libraries in the United Kingdom. Admirable portraits of Mr. Passmore Edwards and Mr. Greenwood are given, as well as about four hundred and fifty other illustrations, portraits, and plans. It is a work which all interested in public libraries will find indispensable, as it is so comprehensive and clearly arranged.

DEATH OF MR. C. G. R. BILLING.

We regret having to record the death of Mr. C. G. R. Billing, of Messrs. Billing & Co., the well-known Trade Delivery and Forwarding Agents of Bridewell Place, E.C., at the age of 69. Mr. 'Bob' Billing had been in failing health for some years, but the end came suddenly, following a stroke of paralysis. He was interred at Nunhead Cemetery on the 30th ult., with every manifestation of regret, for he was much respected in the publishing trade.

MRS. HENRY WOOD'S COPYRIGHTS.

'WILD JUSTICE' IN COURT.

An ex parte application was made to Mr. Justice Swinfen Eady, in the Chancery Division, on Saturday, in the action of Wood v. Butterworth & Co., for an injunction to restrain the defendants from publishing a work under the title of 'Wild Justice,' as being of the authorship of the late Mrs. Henry Wood. The plaintiff is the executor of that lady, and in him the copyright of all her books was vested. He had had bequeathed to him all Mrs. Henry Wood's manuscripts, and he had the sole right of publishing or republishing her works. The title-page of the book published by defendants set out that it was by Mrs. Henry Wood, but Mr. Cassel, who made the application, said that it was hardly possible that it was otherwise than an imposture, Mrs. Henry Wood not being the author. Mr. Justice Swinfen Eady granted an injunction over the first day in next sittings, but said the plaintiff must take any notice to discharge the order before the Vacation Judge.—Daily News.

WORRY AS A SUCCESS-KILLER.

Perhaps there is nothing else so utterly foolish and unprofitable as a habit of worrying. It saps the nervous energy and robs us of the strength and vitality necessary for the real work of life. It makes existence a burden and weariness, instead of a perpetual joy and blessing, as it should be. Poise and serenity are necessary to the complete development of character and true success. The man who worries is never self-centred, never perfectly balanced, never at his best; for every moment of mental anxiety takes away vitality and push, and robs him of manhood and power. Worrying indicates a lack of confidence in our strength; it shows that we are unbalanced, that we do not lay hold of the universal energy which leaves no doubt, no uncertainty. The man who does not worry, who believes in himself, touches the wires of infinite power. Never doubting, never hesitating, he is constantly reinforced from the Omnipotence that creates planets and suns. The habit of worry is largely a physical infirmity; it is an evidence of lack of harmony in the mental system. The well-poised soul, the self-centred man, never wobbles or hesitates. The infinite balance-wheel preserves him from all shocks, and all accident or uncertainty. Enough vital energy has been wasted in useless worry to run all the affairs of the world.—Success.

MESSRS. EYRE & SPOTTISWOODE.

Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode's town and country representatives invited the managers of departments to dinner at the Holborn Restaurant on December 30 under the Chairmanship of Mr. R. A. Tidmas; Vice-Chairman Mr. H. Pack. The toast of the evening 'Prosperity to the firm,' proposed by the Chairman, was responded to by the General Manager, Mr. W. H. James. Other toasts followed, and vocal and instrumental music formed an interesting feature of a very enjoyable evening.

THE FREE DELIVERY SYSTEM IN AMERICA.

The free rural delivery system which is being put into operation at a rapid pace by the government is not yet thoroughly understood by many people. The system is simple and easy of execution. There are thousands of little post offices and stage routes in the United States which may be put out of existence by establishing among the farmers a delivery system similar to that employed in the cities. The carriers start from offices of the second or third class—occasionally from those of the fourth—and cover the entire farming country for miles around. The route must be at least twenty miles long. Carriers arrange with the country folks so that several may get their mail in a single box at a reasonable distance—less than a mile—from their homes. Thus the carriers may serve between 100 and 150 families daily—after the noon hour—Sundays excepted. Carriers carry stamps and other supplies, are authorised to register mail matter and make out money orders. Can any daily newspaper man or mail order dealer fail to see his advantages in this system? It is the intention of the government to so build up this system that all fairly settled rural regions may be covered in this manner—one set of carriers coming up to the line upon which another set is working on the other side. Stage routes and small post offices will be wiped out, and people in farming districts will receive a daily mail service, instead of going to town once a week, as formerly.—Geyer's Stationer.

IRISH CLERICS.

Temple Bar for January has an amusing article on 'Irish Clerics,' by the Rev. Canon Staveley. Here is a story about George Beresford, Bishop of Kilmore (1802-1841):

Mrs. Beresford had a nephew, an incumbent in the diocese. He had been staying at the See House, and his aunt urged him to remain till after Sunday. He declared he could not possibly do so, as the bishop would be sure to ask him to preach, and he had brought no sermon with him. 'Oh,' said his aunt, 'I'll make it all right for you,' and she went to the study and purloined one of the bishop's sermons. On the morrow Master Charlie ascended the pulpit in all the glory of his borrowed plumes, and gave out his text: 'Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots?' He had not finished the first sentence when a loud and angry voice rang from the throne: 'That's too bad, Charlie, too bad; that's my Ethiopian!'

The next story is one which would please Mr. Rider Haggard.

LET US HOPE IT WILL NOT GO TO AMERICA.

Mr. George Gregory, of 5A Argyle Street, Bath, offers for £100 in his latest list of Rare Books the Original Catalogue in Manuscript of the celebrated Cotton Library. According to the description:—'This MS. is in 2 vols., folio, whole bound antique calf, curious original binding, with 2 brass and vellum clasps to each vol. and the Cotton Coat of Arms in gold on each side, in excellent preservation. The original signatures of "Rob. Cotton" and "Thomas Cotton" occur over 50 times at foot of pages in the Catalogue. Sir Robt. Cotton died May 6, 1631; Sir Thomas, May 18, 1662: the Baronetcy became extinct in 1762. Inside cover is copy of Petition relating to the Cottonian Library, 26th George II.' The British Museum is the proper place for this unique work, which has been referred to by almost every English historian and biographer for nearly two centuries.

Notices of Books.

From Messrs. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh.—

'Muhammad and his Power,' by P. De Lacy Johnstone, M.A. It is hardly necessary to speak of the great interest attaching to the latest contribution to the 'World's Epoch-Makers' series. Mr. Johnstone has had a singularly fascinating personality to deal with, and in his portrait of the Prophet and the account of his career he has shown a deftness of treatment that adds greatly to the attraction of his subject. In one way he has been more fortunate than the writers of previous volumes in the series, seeing that he has had plenty of material to his hand; but the work of selection and condensation is no light matter in such a case, and it says much for Mr. Johnstone's discrimination and industry that he should have accomplished his task with so large a measure of success. Within its limits the book affords an excellent survey of Mahomet's life and influence, and it may be recommended with confidence to those who are unable, either from conditions of circumstance or inclination, to study the larger works.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'All About All of Us: Some Higglely-Pigglely Memories of a Happy Childhood, written for Children, from a Child's Point of View,' by M. C. E. W.

The nature of this little volume is sufficiently explained by the title. It will afford great entertainment to the juveniles, and in the doings of 'all of us' they will doubtless recognise many previous delightful experiences of their own. To supplement the attractions of the text there are several capital illustrations by H. M. Brock.

From Messrs. R. A. Everett & Co.—'A Sports-woman's Love Letters,' by * * * *. These letters, though amusing enough in their earlier stages, suffer from a repetition of the same form of humour. They are written in a bright slangy style, which is scarcely a compliment in some of its features to the mental capacity of the sporting community, whether found at Cowes, Doncaster, or in country houses. But we cannot always be on the intellectual tight-rope, and in moments of slackening these chronicles of a sports-woman's love affairs will no doubt be found highly diverting.

From Messrs. Gay & Bird.—'The De Coverley Essays' by Steele and Addison, and Chaucer's 'Canterbury Tales.' These are two of the latest volumes in the dainty 'Bibelots' series, edited by Mr. J. Potter Briscoe. Each has a short but interesting preface, and in the matter of general production could scarcely be improved upon.

From Messrs. Greening & Co., Limited.—'Hall Caine: the Man and the Novelist,' by C. Fred. Kenyon. The author of this acceptable contribution to the 'English Writers of To-day' series is careful to point out that he alone is responsible for the opinions expressed, and that Mr. Caine, beyond the correction of one or two statements concerning other people, has had nothing to do with its production. Perhaps in these days of bold self-advertisement this was necessary, but assuredly Mr. Caine could not have said anything more complimentary of himself than Mr. Kenyon has said for him. He is evidently an earnest admirer of the novelist, whose predominant characteristics, in his view, are sincerity and a love of humanity. 'Heart and brain alike are ever at work for the good of mankind.' A large portion of Mr. Kenyon's monograph is devoted to an account of Mr. Caine's early life, and the steps by which he gradually rose to his present eminence; but he also finds space to criticise the various novels in detail, and he makes copious extracts. An entire chapter is given to a consideration of his subject's position as a dramatist, short-story writer, poet, and critic. Several letters from R. D. Blackmore, Wilkie Collins, and others are included, and give further interest and variety to the volume. We are not altogether at one with Mr. Kenyon in many of his opinions, but we can at least compliment him on a bright readable volume, the outcome of a generous appreciation of his subject. Mr. Caine's portrait appears as a frontispiece.

From Mr. William Heinemann.—'The Soul of a Cat,' by Margaret Benson. This is not the title of a bloodthirsty novel, nor is it a psychological treatise of great insight and power; it is merely an unpretentious series of sketches descriptive of the habits and personality of the cat. Miss Benson very justly takes exception to those who aver that they do not like cats because they are 'selfish, egotistic, and luxurious'; she says that the nature of one cat differs from that of another just as much as the character of Mr. Smith differs from the character of Mr. Robinson. And she knows what she is saying, for her pages reveal a real love for and understanding of the most popular of indoor pets. Madame Henrietta Ronner has lent her skilful pen in illustrating the volume, and there are some excellent photographs.

From Mr. Arthur L. Humphreys, Piccadilly.—'The Foreign Policy of Lord Rosebery: Two Chapters in Recent Politics, 1886 and 1892-5, with Extracts from Lord Rosebery's Speeches.' Several alterations and additions have been made in these chapters since they first appeared in the columns of the Contemporary Review with the object of rendering them more useful for reference. In an appendix Mr. Humphreys also prints some 'illustrative excerpts' from Lord Rosebery's speeches. Politics are outside our province, but we may say that the student of public affairs will find much in this volume to warrant his earnest reflection; and as a reminder of certain phases in the country's foreign policy nothing could be more worthy of attention. The little volume is excellently got up, printed, and bound.

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—'The Romance of King Ludwig II. of Bavaria: his Relations with Wagner and his Bavarian Fairy Palaces,' by Frances Gerard. From a very early age Prince Ludwig, as he then was, showed signs of a peculiar disposition and an ungovernable temper. It is related of him that upon one occasion he was found strangling his brother Otto, and was highly indignant when prevented from executing his purpose. His career presents many features of interest, and of these Miss Gerard has made adroit use. After an introductory chapter, in which she gives some account of the hereditary history of the family, she describes the boyhood of the King, the first years of his accession to the throne, his musical training under Wagner, defective war policy, enrolment as an ally of Austria and participation in her humiliation, betrothal to the Duchess Sophie Charlotte, who ultimately married Prince Ferdinand of Orleans, Duke of Alençon, relations with the Crown Prince of Prussia, love of the stage, and so forth. Gradually as we approach the end of the book we see signs of the King's mental decline, and so we come to the last scene of the tragedy, when his Majesty, having been pronounced mad, was finally placed under confinement in the Castle of Berg, where he subsequently committed suicide. Throughout this sad period the loyalty of the peasant people was most affecting. These poor simple folk did not care for the opinion of the doctors. To them Ludwig was their King, whether he was mad or sane. So ended a career that had in it more of the elements of romance than probably any other monarch's history could show. Miss Gerard has treated her subject with great care and delicate insight, and has produced a highly interesting work. It is embellished with several portraits and other illustrations.

From 'Land and Water' Office.—'Thomas's Hunting Diary,' 1901-2. This new issue of Thomas's Diary, so ably edited by Mr. T. F. Dale, has the advantage of the services of Mr. John Emms as illustrator. The illustrations are too numerous for individual mention, much as they deserve it; for all are characterised by a thorough knowledge of the animals portrayed, the dogs being especially good. We must not omit calling attention to the two interesting groups of Masters of Foxhounds, Harriers, and Beagles, among whom we note one lady, Mrs. Cheape, Master of the Bentley Harriers. Among the many articles of interest is one by Mrs. Eric Pritchard on 'Women and Hunting Kit.' The volume contains all the usual hunting items. A most desirable volume for all interested in the chase.

From Mr. John Lane.—'Jane Austen, her Homes and her Friends,' by Constance Hill, with illustrations by Ellen G. Hill, reproductions in photogravure &c. Inspired by a genuine admiration for Jane Austen's works and a desire to know as much as possible of her life and its surroundings, the author and illustrator of this volume have carefully traced her career, visiting all the places where she lived, and recalling the memories and associations that linger round each. 'Such a pilgrimage in the footprints of a favourite writer would,' they say, 'in many cases lead to a sad disenchantment, but no such pain awaits those who follow Miss Austen's gentle steps. The more intimate their knowledge of her character becomes the more must they admire and love her rare spirit, and the more thorough must be their enjoyment in her racy humour—a humour which makes everything she touches delightful, but which never degenerates into caricature nor into "jestings which are not convenient." The pilgrimage starts at Steventon, a place bright with many early associations of the famous authoress, and extends to Bath, Lyme, Southampton, Stoneleigh Abbey, Chawton, Godmersham, London, and Winchester. It is all very interesting, more by reason of the unaffected method of its description and the genuine pleasure evinced by the enthusiastic admirers of the authoress in their quest than for any particularly fresh information disclosed. Moreover, it carries the mind into peculiarly pleasant paths of thought, and evokes recollections of Jane Austen under family and social surroundings that are very agreeable to linger over. In all fairness it should be said that the illustrations are a highly prominent attraction of the work. Not only are they extremely well executed, but they depict scenes which no amount of descriptive power in the writer could so well reproduce before the eye. The portraits of the volume include Jane Austen, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Knight, Mrs. Austen, Edward Austen, Madame de Feuillade, and the Rev. James Austen.

From the same.—'The Warden,' by Anthony Trollope. In his 'New Pocket Library,' whose volumes are so light, handy, and legible, Mr. John Lane has included that masterpiece of the Barchester series of novels, 'The Warden,' which introduces all the rest, and which everybody must read who desires, as everybody ought, to know about all the characters figuring in those delightful stories by Anthony Trollope, of whom we need but mention Mrs. Proudie, a host in herself.

From Mr. John Long.—'A Man of Iron,' by J. Morgan-de-Groot. One of the most prominent features in Mr. Morgan-de-Groot's novel is a secret society called the League of Terror, the object of which is to promote justice through fear. Each member in the event of any act of injustice coming to his knowledge communicates with the judicial committee, who on their part summon the offender before them in masked assembly and pronounce judgment, both informant and accused being heard. The punishments inflicted vary from small fines to death. As may be imagined, the society finds plenty to do. One of the first cases brought before them is that of a friend of the president, who has seduced a little French governess. He is ordered to marry the girl. He does so, and is unhappy ever after. Nor does the president himself escape scot free. Impelled by a stern sense of justice and the nature of the oath he has taken, he is obliged to arraign the woman he loves, for that she has deserted the man to whom she previously pledged her word and will not return to her allegiance to him. It will be understood now why this president is called 'a man of iron.' For ourselves, we should have given him another name, but no matter. He has a very remarkable career; at one time he is condemned to death (by the proper authorities), and the hangman has actually drawn the cap over his face, when an infuriated crowd, inspired by the League of Terror, breaks into the prison and he is rescued. Justice, however, does not seem to have a very beneficial effect on the characters. One of the best—the girl who is a martyr to the president's obstinacy—commits suicide, and the story ends in impenetrable gloom. It will scarcely pass muster with the previous works of the author.

Local Committee of the British Association have now authorised the publication of the three above-named handbooks, and they can be had of any bookseller. They were all three especially prepared for the Association meeting held at Glasgow in 1901. (a) Twenty-five years ago the British Association met in Glasgow, and at that time a Natural History Handbook dealing with the local flora, fauna, and geology was issued to members; but, owing to paucity of workers and of time, was incomplete and contained errors. The editors do not claim completeness or infallibility for this Handbook. The contributors, however, have spared no pains to make it worthy of the meeting, and its contents and the get-up of the volume, together with the splendid map accompanying it, reflect the greatest credit on all concerned in its production. (b) The second of the above-named Handbooks comprises papers by various authors on mining and quarrying, metallurgy, mechanical engineering, marine engineering and shipbuilding, transport, chemical industries, glass, pottery, brickmaking, &c.; municipal enterprises, by the Lord Provost; and on Clyde navigation by T. R. Mackenzie, and contains a fund of most valuable information on the subjects dealt with. (c) The third Handbook is divided into three parts: Archaeology, Education, and Medical and Charitable Institutions. The first part includes three most interesting papers on Historical Glasgow, by R. Renwick; on the Antonine Wall and its Inscribed Stones, by G. Neilson; and on Glasgow Cathedral, by P. MacGregor Chalmers. The papers on Education and on Medical and Charitable Institutions are too numerous for particular mention; but one and all are characterised by conciseness and knowledge.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Limited.—'Tales of the Spanish Main,' by Mowbray Morris. To say that these narratives of the exploits of Columbus, Balboa, Enciso, brave Francis Drake, John Oxenham, and others have all the charm of fiction while possessing a rigid adherence to fact is but to signify a little of their attraction. Mr. Mowbray Morris has strung together his stories in such form that they can scarcely fail to interest both young and old alike. The illustrations of Mr. Gutzon-Borglum form no inconsiderable attraction of the volume, and there is also a very serviceable map.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'The Air-Gun,' by T. Hilbert. This is a volume from the series of 'Little Blue Books for Children' edited by Mr. E. V. Lucas. It is a book primarily for boys not yet in their teens—the story of how a lad was accidentally shot and nearly blinded. Who was responsible for the deed it was impossible to say, but in the end all is made right. There are four suitable illustrations by Mr. A. H. Buckland.

From the same.—'The Castaways of Meadow Bank,' by Thomas Cobb. The author well knows how to adapt himself to the intellectual limitations of children, and has constructed a story that in variety of incident and vivacity of narration is certain to win their approval. It is a most engrossing little work, well worthy of the excellent series—'The Little Blue Books for Children'—in which it appears. Several illustrations by Mr. Paul Hardy gives further distinction to the book.

From Mr. John Milne.—'Half Way to Hades,' by Theo Irving. The conception of this novel, eccentric though it may be, is infinitely superior to its treatment. Mr. Irving, we think, would have done better to have written a mock tragic narrative, something after the fashion of Mr. Anstey, on the lines laid down, rather than a serious story. That a young man should be threatened with the loss of his eyesight, that he should consult a celebrated specialist on the matter, and that the doctor should tell him there was no hope for him unless he submitted to an operation—there is nothing at all extraordinary in this; the marvel occurs after the operation, which is in some unexplained way connected with photography, has been performed. The patient now sees only too well, he has all the visual powers of the Röntgen rays, the men and women about him appear like gruesome skeletons without flesh-covering of any kind, and even his own anatomy is painfully apparent to him. Nor is this all; he can see into people's minds, and read their thoughts just as plainly as he can perceive their bony framework. This attribute he turns to good purpose by penetrating into the secrets of an eminent stockbroker, and so making a fortune on the Stock Exchange; but to be surrounded by a set of grinning skeletons is more than he can stand, though he himself is one of the crowd. Then he meets a girl on Westminster Bridge whose appearance is quite normal. She is the one patient who has been previously experimented upon, and in some strange way, though she appears like a skeleton to herself, he seems quite natural to her, and vice-versa. The two get married, but the horrors of their life reduce them very speedily to what they appear to be—a pair of skeletons. Ultimately the matter is put right by the use of spectacles, a remedy that nobody seems to have thought of before the end of the story. Readers, we fancy, will now agree with our judgment that the plot was better suited for burlesque than serious treatment.

From Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons.—'The Pilgrim's Progress,' 'The Holy War,' and 'Grace Abounding to the Chief of Sinners,' by John Bunyan. Messrs. Nelson have done well to add to their popular 'New Century Library' these three writings of the inspired tinker, which, notwithstanding the advice of some of his friends, who thought no good would come from printing 'The Pilgrim's Progress,' have done and continue to do good to those who read them. We can conscientiously aver that this is not the least valuable volume of the excellent series. Seldom have so many good things been made up into such a small parcel.

From Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd.—'The First Men in the Moon,' by H. G. Wells. In vivid description of natural scenery, in terse, dramatic narrative, and in delightful touches of unexpected humour, Mr. Wells has written nothing so good as his latest novel. It relates how Mr. Bedford and Mr. Cavour invent a substance which resists the force of gravitation, how a hollow sphere is constructed of this substance, and how a journey to the moon is safely and speedily undertaken. They land just at the dawn of day when all things are frozen, even the thin atmosphere. At the rise of the sun everything is changed. 'The harsh emphasis, the pitiless black and white of the scenery had altogether evaporated. The glare of the sun had taken upon itself a faint tinge of amber; the shadows upon the cliff of the crater wall were deeply purple. To the eastward a dark bank of fog still crouched and sheltered from the sunrise, but to the westward the sky was blue and clear.' Their adventures inside the moon (for the inhabitants—the Selenites—live almost exclusively in huge caverns scores of miles below the surface of their globe) are related in Mr.

Wells's best style; he has the power to make even the highest flights of his imagination seem not only possible, but actual. Mr. Bedford returned to the earth alone to escape the long cold night which was approaching, and Mr. Cavour is still in the moon, from which he has at different times sent several messages. Mr. Bedford believes he has been killed by the Selenites; we hope this supposition will prove to be false. The anonymous illustrations are exceedingly clever and effective.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'The Forest Schoolmaster,' by Peter Rosegger. Authorised translation by Frances E. Skinner. There is an attraction about this story of Austrian peasant life, a simplicity of incident, combined with delicate perception of emotional character, that can scarcely fail to have its favourable influence upon readers. The author writes as from the manner born, seeing that he himself until he reached the age of eighteen led the life of a peasant in a lonely mountainous region of Austria, afterwards being apprenticed for four years to a travelling peasant tailor; and it was during these early years that he first took to writing, not for the purpose of interesting other people, but as a means of amusing himself, for at that time he had not the slightest thought of publication. The 'forest schoolmaster' is one Andreas Erdmann, who, disheartened by his experience of the outside world, retreats to the small isolated village of Winkelsteg, the home chiefly of charcoal burners, and there as pedagogue for fifty years exercises an extremely beneficent, civilising sway over the community. He then suddenly disappears, and the mystery of his departure is not disclosed until the end of the volume. Further than this it is not necessary to particularise the plot. We can confidently recommend Mr. Rosegger's work to all who like stories of unconventional life, told with great feeling and descriptive power. The translator has admirably caught the spirit of the narrative, and to her excellent work no little of the success of the English edition is due.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—'The World's Classics,' Vols. VIII., IX., X. The first of these additions to Mr. Grant Richards's handy and beautifully printed, yet economical, series, 'The World's Classics,' which is a delight to handle and read, forms also the first volume of a new edition of the novels of Charles Dickens, and contains one of that great writer's most powerful stories, 'Oliver Twist,' 'the precision and unexaggerated force of the delineation of the subject being' (as John Forster wrote) 'not to be disputed.' It seems a pity that George Cruikshank's illustrations could not be given even at an extra shilling, the price at which Richard Bentley valued them. For in 1839 his price for three-volume novels was twenty-four shillings, and he announced that 'Oliver Twist' would be twenty-five shillings on account of the illustrations! The second of these volumes contains that perennially interesting collection of Mirth and Marvels, 'The Ingoldsby Legends,' by that genial writer the Rev. Richard Harris Barham. The third volume is devoted to Emily Brontë's weird romance, 'Wuthering Heights.'

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'The Triumph of the Cross,' by Fra Girolamo Savonarola. Translated from the Italian, and edited, with introduction, by the Very Rev. Father John Procter. The interest of this work need scarcely be enlarged upon. It is only necessary to say that Father Procter has contributed an excellent preface, and that his supervision of the text might have ensured a greater uniformity in punctuation. The frontispiece of the volume is a portrait of the author, which, even proceeding from so great a hand as Fra Bartolommeo, can scarcely be termed flattering.

From Messrs. H. Virtue & Co., Limited.—'An Anthology of Humorous Verse,' edited by Theodore A. Cooke, and 'Père Goriot,' by Honoré de Balzac, a new translation. These are further volumes in the excellent 'Turner House Classics,' of which we have previously had occasion to speak favourably in these columns. We are inclined to question the direction in which these cheap editions are leading us, but none can dispute the admirable distinction, alike in qualities of printing, binding, and paper, of the present series. In every way they are worthy of the highest praise.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

NOW READY.

DOD'S

For 1902 (Sixty-second Year).

This differs from all other Peerages in—

1. Its low price.
2. Its enlarged Contents.
3. Its facility of reference.

The TIMES says: 'The great merits of Dod's excellent "Peerage, Baronetage, and Knightage" are its cheapness, its handy size, and its easiness of reference. In the combination of these three qualities, it is unequalled.'

'For ready and convenient reference there is nothing better than "Dod's Peerage." ... As comprehensive a guide as anybody could desire.'—WORLD.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

IMPORTANT

ALL who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the

Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

ESTABLISHED 1837

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following:—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of the most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some HUNDREDS OF OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

Our Special Educational Number

This will be issued next Week, January 18, and will as usual contain a large amount of information peculiarly suitable for those engaged in scholastic work, notes on forthcoming educational books, reviews of new volumes, &c., &c. Every endeavour, in short, will be made to render it of interest to the heads of schools and colleges and of practical value to the Trade. As in former years, copies will be sent to all the large educational establishments of the United Kingdom, and to many in the Colonies and on the Continent.

In addition to above, we have also arranged to send this Special Number to over Two Thousand of the Principal Libraries in the Empire.

Advertisements should be sent as soon as possible, addressed to the Manager of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C., and endorsed 'Educational Number.'

The English Catalogue of Books. Vol. VI., January, 1898, to December, 1900. (Sampson Low & Co.)

THE sixth volume of this invaluable aid to the bibliophile concludes the record of English books of the last century. How rapidly the output increases is shown by the fact that whereas the fourth volume of slightly over 700 pages contained the books published from 1881 to 1889, the sixth volume, which reaches nearly 800 pages, covers no more than three years. It is true that additions to the information supplied are made in the later volumes. These are, however, responsible for less than a hundred pages, and go very little way towards explaining the rate of increase. According to the admirable scheme now followed, titles and index are not only in one volume, but in one alphabet. Take a name, for instance, such as Kipling, R. This, as that of the author, is printed in heavy type. It is repeated before every item, and the full title of the book, its dimensions, contents, price, publisher, and year are also given. As regards size, we have not only terms, such as "cr. 8vo." but particulars, such as "7 $\frac{3}{4}$ x 5 $\frac{1}{2}$." We have spoken of this work, not only on the appearance of volumes, but on the production of annual parts, as one of the most serviceable we possess. Few works concerning books are consulted by us with more frequency or advantage, and the appearance of successive volumes is hailed by us with gratification. The possession of a complete set is a matter on which the book-lover is to be congratulated almost as warmly as is the librarian and the bookseller, to whom it is, of course, a trade organ. —NOTES AND QUERIES, Dec. 14, 1901.

THE AMERICAN NATION.

The most interesting weekly journal which comes to us from America is the Nation, made up, in part at any rate, if not entirely, out of the daily editions of the New York Evening Post. Since the issue for December 26 is No. 1904, it must be approaching its fortieth year of existence—not old for a paper, and showing no signs of age. The Nation takes for its field politics, literature, science, and art, and, as far as we can judge, we should say that a more able, fearless, and influential exponent of American views on those subjects does not exist. We have no journal here quite like it; none in all respects, so strong; and if any reader of these lines wishes to understand something of the affairs of that great English-speaking nation which dominates the New World he cannot do better than look into this weekly mirror of it. The English reader will not often be pleased with the Nation's views of English politics and policy, but it is well that he should know them, for if a journal, in other respects so free from prejudice as the Nation, is often grossly unfair in criticising us, we can more easily understand how less responsible critics deliberately misrepresent us. As an instance of deliberate misrepresentation by one of the anti-English papers—not the Nation—what could well be meaner than the attempt recently made by an American paper to show that it was Russia and not England which prevented European intervention in favour of Spain? Was it the Russian fleet which kept all others quiet while America defeated Spain?—was it a Russian warship which cleared for action when Admiral Dewey was impeded by the German commander in Manila Bay?

Apart from this anti-English bias, the English reader of the Nation will, we think, be most favourably impressed by the independence and high quality of the articles he finds in its pages; those devoted to literature are almost uniformly good. As a specimen we take at random, out of the last number to hand, a short review of an English book, 'The Old Testament and the New Scholarship,' by Dr. J. P. Peters (see p. 31). And as a specimen of the anti-English bias of the Nation, we take this extract from a very favourable review of another English book, viz. Miss Meakin's account of her journey over the Trans-Siberian Railway, entitled 'A Ribbon of Iron'; both books are published here by Messrs. Methuen.

'The information which Miss Meakin received concerning the massacres of the Chinese at Blagovestchensk, and the general operations of the Russians in Manchuria, being obtained from hearsay evidence after leaving the region, is somewhat misleading. She represents the massacre as "inhuman" and "brutal," following the current reports which appeared in English papers, though she received the account herself from eye-witnesses. Her witnesses, however, did not see all the facts. The full truth is, that the Russians were taken perfectly by surprise by the attack of the Chinese upon them in Manchuria, and were utterly unprepared for it. To such an extent did the Russians confide in the goodwill of the Chinese that, as Miss Meakin herself says, they had completely denuded the place of soldiers, sending them down the river for general service. The opening of fire by the Chinese spread immediate consternation such as can be appreciated only by one who was in the midst of the scenes which followed. The expulsion of the Chinese from the Russian side seemed to be a military necessity of the most imperative order, for, owing to the suddenness of the attack, it was natural to believe that no Chinaman could be trusted, and that if the Chinese remained the city would be between two fires. The Chinese were therefore ordered across the river, and would for the most part have crossed in safety had not the Chinese themselves opened fire upon the rafts containing their countrymen. . . . War is, indeed, hell, as General Sherman said. But, in this case it was the Chinese who forced its terrible alternative upon the Russians, and it was but the "fortunes of war" which they suffered by their own invitation.'

The italics are ours and we should like to know what better authority the Nation has than the reports published in England, and in France and Germany too for that matter, based, as is that of Mrs. Meakin, on the testimony of eyewitnesses. Nothing approaching the horrors of the Blagovestchensk affair has happened in South Africa, and yet the Nation allows its columns to be used by correspondents who charge England with imprisoning Boer women and children with the intention of destroying them. Did General Sherman feed, clothe, and nurse the families of the men he was fighting against—his own countrymen—while he carried fire and sword through the land? Did we first invade the territories of the Boers, or are the 'fortunes of war' from which they have suffered 'their own invitation'? We can well afford to let history judge of our efforts to protect our own countrymen in South Africa, and of the attempts of the Americans to crush a people 'struggling to be free' in the Philippines.

In inviting the attention of our readers to this brilliant American journal we have been obliged to point out its, at times, bitterly unfair attitude towards this country in the domain of 'Politics.' As regards 'Literature,' 'Science,' and 'Art,' English readers will have nothing to complain of—on the contrary, they will not easily find more impartial and informing criticism.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Standard says:—'Seldom has such a fantastic theory as Mrs. Gallup's cyphers-story received the serious attention of so many distinguished scholars.' [As our discovery that Bacon in the seventeenth century stole Pope's Homer published in the eighteenth century was cabled to America by the New York and Boston papers and published there before Christmas, Mrs. Gallup has had plenty of time to reply in the Times.—ED. P.C.]

In consequence of the additional orders which have reached them for the January number of the Quiver, Messrs. Cassell & Company have been obliged to put in hand a reprint of the number. Copies will be ready early next week.

The Westminster Gazette says:—'Mrs. Gallup will reply to her critics in the March number of the Pall Mall Magazine. The article will no doubt be widely read, as no contribution from Mrs. Gallup's pen has hitherto appeared in any periodical in this country.'

The Macmillan Company publish a selection from the 'Comedies of Marivaux,' edited with notes by Prof. E. W. Olmsted, of Cornell University, whose introduction gives an interesting and thorough account and criticism of an author whose vogue and influence was great in his own day, and who has recently been ranked above Beaumarchais and Voltaire as a dramatist by a leading French critic.

Mr. John Murray's announcements for January include: 'Christ our Life,' by the Rev. Canon R. C. Moberly, D.D.; 'Felicia Skene, of Oxford,' a memoir by E. C. Rickards, with numerous portraits and other illustrations; 'Archdeacon Denison: Fifty years at East Brent, 1845-1896,' based on his diaries and correspondence, edited by his niece, Miss Louisa Denison, with portraits and illustrations; 'Greek Coins, and their Parent Cities,' by John Ward, F.S.A., with over 500 illustrations.

General Baden-Powell has taken with him to South Africa a copy of Mr. C. Ranger-Gull's new book, 'The Cigarette Smoker.' The popular General has several times strongly deprecated the growing mania for cigarette-smoking among the rising generation, and, in a letter acknowledging the receipt of Mr. Ranger-Gull's book, General Baden-Powell says he trusts that 'since you have put the matter in this popular light it will receive the attention it well deserves.'

Mr. Norman Hapgood, whose brilliant study of Abraham Lincoln will be remembered, produces with the Macmillan Company a pendant to it in his biographical memoir of George Washington, making a volume of convenient size, with a few good portraits and other illustrations. Mr. Hapgood is among the most notable of the younger American writers.

As is well known, Mrs. Arthur Bell's 'Elementary History of Art' has received the hall-mark of official recognition both in England and America, and has gone through several editions. Her new volume, 'The Saints in Christian Art' (Bell), bids fair to take a similar position, for it supplies a long-felt want, embodying, as it does, the results of modern research in the important subjects of the origin of legends, their representation in art, and the meaning of the symbols associated with the saints.

Mrs. Archibald Little's new book, 'In the Land of the Blue Gown,' will be published by Mr. Fisher Unwin next week. The author of 'Intimate China' sets forth the purpose of her book in its prologue: 'I here seek to reproduce in black and white the picturesqueness and the mediæval usages, the drowsy dulness, the unexplained attacks on the part of the Chinese, the equally unexplained absence of all measures on the part of the British Government to prevent their recurrence; then, again, the friendliness of the people, the amiability of the officials, indications of progress on all sides, till on a sudden came the thunderclap of 1900, with here and there, in relief against the blackness of the following typhoon, the sympathetic and self-sacrificing kindness of here an official, there a peasant, here a trembling ignorant woman, there an educated man.' The book, further, touches upon such subjects as 'Life on a Farmstead Fifteen Hundred Miles inside China,' 'Fengtu, the Chinese Hades,' 'Little-known Border Tribes,' and 'What are Missionaries doing?' It is illustrated from over 100 photographs.

Messrs. Methuen will publish in a few days a new edition of the celebrated Report of Lord Durham on the state of Canada. This Report, which is at present of extraordinary interest and value, has been out of print for many years and is now unobtainable. The new edition contains an introductory note.

Mr. Clarence Forestier-Walker, the translator of that popular and entertaining book, 'Romance of a Harem,' has written a society novel called 'The Silver Gate,' which Messrs. Greening will publish early in the New Year. Mr. Forestier-Walker is the author of 'The Derelict and Tommy,' which was published anonymously last year.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will publish immediately a new historical romance entitled 'Where Honour Leads,' by Marian Francis. The period dealt with is the reign of George II., and the story is one of Hanoverians and Jacobites, but it has the novelty of concentrating the interest upon the former and not on the latter.

Mr. John Long will publish the following new novels in January: 'Houses of Ignorance,' by Frederic Carrel; 'A Daughter of England,' by May Crommelin; 'The Green Turbans,' by J. Maclaren Cobban, and a sixpenny edition of Florence Warden's 'Our Widow.'

'The Anthracite Coal Industry,' by Dr. P. Roberts, is the natural history of a highly specialised industry. Anthracite coal in the United States, being limited to a particular area, is a natural monopoly. It is exploited on the one hand by a strongly organised syndicate, on the other by a solid union composed of workers from a score of nationalities with nothing in common but the needs of their labour. Thus many interesting economic problems are presented in a very concrete shape. Nothing connected with the industry is omitted, from the geology of anthracite to the housing of the workers. The book is published by the Macmillan Company.

Messrs. Truslove, Hanson & Comba, Ltd., publish a little work entitled 'Corpulence and Thinness as Curable Conditions: How to Reduce or Gain Weight,' by Dr. Wm. G. Sutherland, C.M.O. by Appt. of War Office to South African Field Forces; Sen. Med. Off. Orange River Military Hospital.

Messrs. Skeffington will issue immediately a new book by the Rev. Geo. Arbuthnot, Vicar of Stratford-on-Avon, entitled 'The Passion of Christ foretold in Type and Prophecy.'

Messrs. Matthews & Brooke, Fine Art Dealers, Bradford, send us a catalogue of their Gordon Browne Exhibition, with special cover designed by the artist. It is very neatly got up.

DID SHAKESPEAR WRITE THE BOOK OF PSALMS?

'S. L. H.,' in the column of the Morning Leader headed 'Sub Rosa,' says that the following suggestion reaches him 'from a learned correspondent in West Hackney':—'In the name Shakespear there are four vowels and six consonants. . . . If you write down the figure 4 and then follow it by the figure 6, you get 46. Very well—turn to Psalm 46 and you will find that in it the 46th word from the beginning is "shake," while the 46th word from the end is "spear." This fact, or rather these facts, may be held to prove, according to my correspondent, that the Psalms were written by Shakespear and that this is really the correct way of spelling his name. I know that controversialists are a fierce tribe and they stick at each other as well as nothing, and so they will try to make out that the word "spear" is the 47th and not the 46th word from the end of the 46th Psalm; but this can only be done by counting "Selah," and if you think I am going to throw over a valuable literary discovery for the sake of an odd "Selah," you are mistaken.'

A STATIONER'S NOTICE TO BURGLARS.

'To burglars and all others burglariously inclined:—Please do not trouble yourself to smash open this door. It is open. Inside you will find the cash drawer on the counter; and the keys to the safe, with instructions to use them, will be found alongside of the cash drawer. Save yourself trouble and me the cost of repairing whatever you might otherwise be inclined to break or ruin.'

This is a notice that hangs outside the door of William King's stationery store, at 356 Sixth Avenue, Brooklyn. In accordance with the notice the door of the store is unlocked, the cash drawer is on the counter inside and the keys to the safe repose in a prominent place on the counter.

Three times within a year burglars have forced open Mr. King's store and helped themselves to whatever they could find, besides breaking doors and injuring the safe and damaging the cash drawer.

When the police learned of Mr. King's notice a policeman was sent to watch the store, and he has been on duty there ever since. Mr. King is now happy.—Geyer's Stationer.

DEATH OF MR. J. B. CLARK, OF PENZANCE.

We regret to hear that Mr. J. B. Clark died suddenly on December 21. His widow, Mrs. J. Barfett Clark, 16 Market Place, Penzance, will carry on the business.

APPEAL ON BEHALF OF THE FAMILY OF THE LATE MR. POPE.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—I enclose a copy of a circular which is being issued to 'The Trade' on behalf of the family of the late Mr. Pope, a well-known and much-respected member of the trade. My object in troubling you at this time is to enlist your sympathy on behalf of the fund, and to ask for your kind help in bringing the fund before the notice of the trade generally, and giving it that publicity which is essential to its success. You will confer a favour on those interested in bringing the matter to a successful conclusion if you will insert the circular in your next issue along with the list of those who have already subscribed. I hope very shortly to have a further list of subscriptions in hand, and I shall ask you to be good enough to repeat the circular. Trusting you may see your way to oblige in this matter,

I am, yours faithfully,
YOUNG J. PENTLAND.

APPEAL ON BEHALF OF THE FAMILY OF THE LATE MR. POPE.

Copy of Circular.

DEAR SIR,—The late Mr. Pope, who for many years represented Messrs. Whittaker & Co. in conjunction with Messrs. Dulau & Co. and Messrs. Lockwood & Co., was, through adverse circumstances and long-continued domestic trouble, unable to make any provision for those dependent on him. He has left three daughters and an invalid son, who are now in a very destitute state. Immediately on Mr. Pope's decease the three firms already named, with the kindness characteristic of them, jointly subscribed a sum sufficient to meet the immediate necessities of the case. Mr. Pope's friends, however, now deem it desirable to appeal to 'The Trade' generally on behalf of his family. He was so highly regarded by all with whom he came in contact, that, in making this appeal, the undersigned feel somewhat confident that it will be heartily responded to. The following subscriptions have already been promised or received, and we trust you may see your way to second the efforts which are now being made to raise a sum sufficient to enable his family to secure suitable occupation.

Any contributions you care to send will be thankfully received and acknowledged.
Yours faithfully,

A CORRECTION.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—We notice your issue of Jan. 4 contains a report of the action of Wood v. Butterworth & Co. with reference to Mrs. Henry Wood's copyright; and we should like to say that we were not the defendants in the case, and that we have no connection whatever with any firm trading as Richard Butterworth & Co. As our firm has been established nearly one hundred years and is known world-wide as Butterworth & Co., we shall be much obliged if you will insert this letter.

ADVERTISING FOR LEAVES OUT OF BOOKS.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—May I raise a protest against the insertion in your columns under the heading 'Books Wanted to Purchase' (should it not run 'Books Wanted' simply, or else 'Books Wanted to be Purchased'?) of Advertisements for SINGLE pages or leaves of books?
It appears to me, as a humble lover of books, to be a direct encouragement to the pernicious and detestable practice of the mutilation of books in public institutions and elsewhere.

One firm advertising in your current number has no less than five such 'wants.'
Trusting that you will afford opportunity for discussion of this important matter,
I am, Sir,
Yours very faithfully,
'X. R. X.'

[We agree with 'X. R. X.' that 'Books Wanted' is all that is required for our head-line on the list of books wanted, and will have it so in future. But as regards advertisements for parts of books we cannot see why bonâ fide collectors who want pages or have pages to sell should be debarred from advertising because somebody may be a rogue. Imperfect copies are often sold or exchanged. At the present moment we happen to want imperfect copies of the first edition of 'Walton's Angler,' to buy or exchange; it is not at all likely any thief could get a first edition and tear out the pages we want, but there may be imperfect copies in existence and for sale.—ED. P.C.]

'THE OLD TESTAMENT AND THE NEW SCHOLARSHIP.'

From the American Nation, Dec. 26 (see p. 29 of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR this week).
'The Old Testament and the New Scholarship.' By John P. Peters, Ph.D., Sc.D., D.D. London: Methuen & Co.; New York: Macmillan. 1901. Pp. xii + 328.

This book gives an excellent idea of the attitude towards the value and authority of the Old Testament, and indeed of the Bible generally, possible for a Broad Church Episcopalian. Dr. Peters is an archæologist of position, and has been a close student of the higher criticism, which he accepts in the large. Of some of its more recent and minutely verbal results he has admittedly his doubts, and it is evident that the modern rehabilitation of the Homeric poems has shaken him as to still more. He is also a Trinitarian Christian in the exact sense, accepts the incarnation and the general doctrine of the person of Christ, and regards, apparently, the record of the life of Jesus in the Gospels as sound and historical. For him New Testament criticism is fairly over, and that of the Old may in time swing back similarly into greater approximation to former positions. A great gulf thus separates him from the attitude most prominent in Cheyne's 'Encyclopædia Biblica.' On the other hand, he does not accept a doctrine of the inspiration and authority of the Scriptures which would satisfy the Princeton school. The Bible, he holds, is the record of God's speaking to man, and not the word of God itself. There is only one Word of God, Christ. As a consequence, he has a comparatively free hand in dealing with the Biblical texts, and finds a human side—which, he contends, was a necessary side—all through them. Canonicity, for him, means that a book for ages has corresponded and responded to the needs of humanity: inspiration, that it has been given the power so to do. The Church is a living and inspired witness that Jesus is the Word of God, and it presents the Bible as written evidence of the same. Yet Dr. Peters makes no mention of Apostolic Succession, and the Church does not figure with him as the almighty She.

This position, then, he has to justify against the modern higher criticism, or with its assistance, as he would prefer to say. His book divides into four parts. The first deals with the doctrine of Scripture: what inspiration means and the Church teaches as to it; what is the bearing on it of the doctrine of the incarnation and of the use of the Old Testament by Jesus. The second is an application of the idea of evolution to the Bible—the evolution in the religion of Israel and especially in the Messianic hope. There is great freshness of thought and thoroughness of scholarship in this part. The third is a lengthy study, much by way of specimen, of the book of Psalms. The latter half will have interest mostly for Episcopalians, and will seem to others rather dragged in, as it is an account of the origin of the Prayer Book version and an examination of its present-day suitability. Fourth, comes a review of the results of archaeology. Here, above all, Dr. Peters is at home; and in dealing with early Semitic writing materials, the Semitic script, stone worship, the ark of the Covenant, and the book of Daniel, he develops an easy familiarity and width of detail, combined with a certain refreshing and well-balanced shrewdness and common sense.

This last addition to 'The Churchman's Library' has evidently passed through a lecture stage, and still suffers somewhat in consequence in the way of diffuseness. But its usefulness for its intended readers is probably not seriously impaired by that, and for anyone who seeks with a tolerably good critical and archaeological conscience to hold fast to the kernel of Christianity, a better apologia could not easily be commended. Without either unctuousness of tone or straining of argument, Dr. Peters has very fairly met the difficulties which centre round the doctrine of the Bible. His method is excellent and his spirit, except towards Presbyterians, is irreproachable. A fragment of criticism: the Egyptian origin of the Phœnician alphabet can hardly now be called 'the most commonly accepted opinion.' It is even beginning to drop out of the encyclopædias, and there are few specialists that do it reverence. Further, the Ka'ba at Mecca is not the same as the sacred stone there. The Ka'ba is the square building, the House of God: the Black Stone is built into its south-east corner.

'PEARSON'S MAGAZINE' CHANGES HANDS.

The control of Pearson's Magazine is said to have been transferred from London to J. J. Little, former President of the Board of Education, New York, he having purchased the English shares of the publication from C. Arthur Pearson, says the Fourth Estate.

C. N. Greig, manager of the American edition of the Magazine, when seen at the office of the publication, Nos. 43 and 45 East 19th Street, said:—

'While the negotiations are not entirely concluded, it is intended that the control of Pearson's Magazine shall pass from London to New York. Mr. Pearson wishes to concentrate all of his efforts and capital in his Daily Express and branch newspapers which he has already started in Newcastle and Crewe, with Birmingham and Manchester in immediate contemplation.

'J. J. Little will purchase the English shares and practically assume Mr. Pearson's place in the business. The active editorial and business management of Pearson's and such other publications as we may issue will remain in my charge, and there is no change contemplated in the present editorial or business staff.'—Press.

TRADE CHANGES &c.

Mr. R. W. Skertchly has resigned his connection with Messrs. Isbister & Co., Ltd., so as to devote the whole of his time to the interests of Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd., whom he will represent, as usual, throughout England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland.

'PARLIAMENT, PAST AND PRESENT.'

Hearing that Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. were about to commence the publication of another important new work in parts, and thinking that some particulars of the work would be of interest to our readers, our representative had an interview with Mr. Spencer, the member of the firm who is superintending the preparation of the work, and who kindly offered to explain his project.

'It is surprising,' said Mr. Spencer, 'that such a work as we now have in hand has not us decide to give definite shape to an idea I had been developing for a long time. Our intention now is to convey to the widest possible public in an adequate manner, and in the most popular and attractive form, the story of the Palace and its Parliaments from earliest times right down to date.'

'Are you proposing to deal with the work chronologically?'

'No. The scheme is that it shall be divided into sections, and that the old and new shall be alternated with a view of giving that variety and freshness which will make it eminently readable. Naturally, that portion which deals with Parliament and its many stirring scenes and memorable events will take up a large share of the work, but this section will be divided into periods and be relieved by chapters which will deal with the lighter aspects. For instance, the second part will include a section on "The Speaker as Host," and will, in addition to interesting references to past hospitality, introduce the present Speaker and his surroundings.'

'Then you propose to deal with the social side as well as the historical?'

'The scheme will not, I think, be complete unless we show Parliament not only at work but in its perhaps happier moments, when the comforts of what has been called "the best Club in London" are being enjoyed. It will give you some idea of the variety of the matter if I mention a few of the heads of the sections that occur to me. There will, for instance, be sections devoted to "Coronations," "The Great Trials," "The Famous Speeches from the Throne," "Famous Speakers," "Famous Speeches and Divisions," "The Great Lord Chancellors," "The Press," "The Lobby," and many others too numerous to mention, and there will also be full descriptions of the old Palace and the new Houses. Of course very little now remains of the old buildings but Westminster Hall, which itself dates back to William Rufus, and which will require a large section, for it has been the scene of many great events. We shall show the huge machinery of the modern Houses in action, and give all the picturesque sides as well. Considerable space will be given to the usages and customs of Parliament, and even the feminine element will not be neglected, for a section will be devoted to "Ladies at the House." It will come as a revelation to most to know that women had a right to attend the early Parliaments, and were sometimes summoned to do so, though they seem always to have sent their husbands as proxies. At times, too, they have got into the House by force while it was sitting and defied all the powers there to turn them out.'

'I suppose the illustration of the work will be one of its great features?'

'That is so. It has, of course, involved a large amount of research, and I have personally spent much time in this direction and in making selections from a great deal of material, but I think the magnificent and interesting collection we have made will justify the very large amount of time and money that has been spent on it. There are a great many pictures of historic scenes available, and where an historic picture does not exist of some famous scene we are having a special picture drawn to commemorate it. We have also had a vast number of photographs specially taken, exceptional

Specimen Illustration from 'Parliament Past and Present'

been attempted before. You will see that it is to be called "Parliament, Past and Present," and I may say there is a wonderful story of the greatest possible interest arising out of the history of the Palace of Westminster which really ought to be known to every British subject, for it is unparalleled in the history of the world. It might almost be said that the Empire has been built up within its walls; yet so little is known of the old Palace and its associations that there are few who have ever realised even that a Royal Residence existed on the site of the present Houses of Parliament at least 500 years before the foundations of the Tuileries were laid. During the thousand years of the history of the Palace there has been endless variety of remarkable events, dramatic scenes, and pageantries of all kinds, which lend themselves to picturesque treatment; indeed, it was the wealth of material I found available that made facilities having been granted us by eminent officials at the House for the purpose. Perhaps not the least interesting set of pictures will be the gallery of celebrated Parliamentary men from earliest times, for these will be very largely taken from paintings by famous artists.

'And what about the style of production? Is it to be the same as your "Living Races of Mankind" and "Living Animals of the World"?'

'Yes. We were so successful with those two works that I don't think we can do better than adopt the same style. We shall produce the work on a superb art paper, the finest blocks will be made, and the type and printing will be of the best. I need only point to what we have done already to give you some idea of what the result will be, but I will say that in this new work we are paying unusual attention to the coloured plates, of which there will be at least eighteen. You will see from this specimen that we are getting something that is right in advance of anything hitherto produced from blocks made by the process of direct colour photography. We have experimented very largely in this new process, and I am sorry to say we are obliged to go to France for our best work. I am hoping, however, that it will not be long before the English block-makers and colour-printers will give us as good results. There will be at least one coloured plate with every part, and in the first part we shall also include a photograph plate, which, as you will see, is a beautiful representation of the Old House of Commons in 1793 containing most interesting portraits of well-known Parliamentary men of the time. Among the coloured plates will be a number of fine portraits reproduced from blocks made direct from the original paintings.'

'In how many parts do you propose to publish the work?'

'We shall get it completed in 18 parts, to be published fortnightly. Altogether there will be about 600 pages, with some 600 or 700 illustrations. As all this will be obtained for the small sum of 10s. 6d. you will see that we are giving the largest possible value, and are looking for a very big circulation. The trade has helped us so loyally in distributing our other serials that we look with confidence to their support on this occasion. We have prepared some very effective posters, show-cards, and illustrated prospectuses, which will be sent, with a specimen copy, to any bookseller or newsagent who applies for them. We do not think we can do better than give the public the opportunity of judging for themselves what the work will be like before becoming subscribers. The trade will also have the advantage of getting their copies on sale or return. I ought to add that the work is being very capably written. Mr. Arnold Wright, who is largely responsible for it, has had a great many years' experience within the precincts of the House in writing on Parliamentary matters, while Mr. Philip Smith, an official of the Vote Office, who is ably assisting Mr. Wright, has made a special study of the customs of Parliament and of the interesting features of the old and new buildings. I would venture to say that the text will be as much appreciated as the pictures, for I do not see how it could have been more interestingly written.'

certainly meet that condition, for nothing of the kind has ever before been attempted, nor is the interest in it limited to any particular public, for it should appeal to every British-born subject throughout the world. It would perhaps not be too much to say that to write the history of the Palace of Westminster is really to write the history of England, though from a standpoint entirely unlike any from which it has ever before been viewed.'

Mr. Spencer then particularly called attention to the beautiful cover design for the work, which, as it is something quite new in the publishing world, we reproduce. The original design was modelled in wax, and it is from a photograph of this model that our block is made. We also reproduce one of the many interesting pictures that will find a place in the work. We do not for one moment doubt that Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. have another success in front of them, for they are certainly making a very strong appeal to a very large public. We can recommend our readers to obtain all information at the earliest possible date. The time for publication is extremely well chosen, for the work will commence on the 27th inst., directly after the opening of Parliament, and will be running while the press is day by day full of Parliamentary news, and news about the Coronation.

FISHING AND CATCHING £2,000,000.

Mr. Hew Morrison, librarian at the Edinburgh Public Library, in moving a vote of thanks to Mr. Thomas Shaw on January 7, said that he knew Mr. Shaw best as a fisher, and he might mention that it was really in fishing with Mr. Andrew Carnegie that Mr. Shaw happened to land the £2,000,000 for the Scottish universities. (Laughter and applause.) He knew that Mr. Carnegie looked upon it in that light.

Reduced Copy from the Cover

'I suppose this form of publication in parts is still well received by the public?'

'I think there has always been, and always will be a large public for a really good work published in parts at a cheap price. Such immense value as we are now offering could not be given in any other way. The difficulty usually experienced is to find something that is absolutely new, and in the present case we

Notices of Books.

From Messrs. Adam & Charles Black.—'Burns's Poetical Works, Complete,' edited by Jas. A. Manson. Those who would like a small handy edition of their Burns, such as can be conveniently carried in the pocket, will heartily welcome this daintily produced little volume. By a combination of small but clear type and India paper it has been found possible to print all the poems, epistles, songs, epigrams, and epitaphs within some six hundred and fifty pages, and room is also found for notes, index, glossary and biographical sketch—the last-named being very discriminating in its estimate of the personal character and literary qualities of the Scottish bard. A photogravure portrait of Robert Burns from the Nasmyth painting in the National Portrait Gallery forms the frontispiece to the volume.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Limited. — 'English Coronation Records,' edited by Leopold G. Wickham Legg, B.A. The object the author has had in view in this large but remarkably light book is 'to gather into one volume a series of documents which will give the consecutive history of the coronation in England from the earliest time down to the coronation of Queen Victoria.' In its four hundred and odd pages a great mass of material has been printed, affording much interesting information respecting the changes that from time to time have taken place in coronation ceremonies, the ordination of Aidan as King by St. Colombo, an English coronation order of the ninth century, a coronation order written before the Conquest, a coronation order of the twelfth century, the coronation of Richard I., the regalia of Henry III., the coronation of Eleanor of Provence, the 'Liber Regalis' (of which a long extract in the form of a coronation order is given), the coronation oath as revised by Henry VIII., the coronation order of Charles I., James II., and William and Mary, the processions and banquet at George IV.'s coronation, the coronation order of Queen Victoria, and kindred aspects of the subject. Scattered throughout the volumes are many highly interesting illustrations, these depicting such important objects in connection with the ceremony as the great seals of Edward I. and Richard I., the imperial pall of Queen Victoria, various coronation rings, the great seal of Edward III., the coronation chair, a facsimile of the oath of Henry VIII., and the crown and sceptres of Charles I. Reproductions are also given, mostly from MSS. in the possession of the Cambridge University Library, of the coronation of St. Edmund, Edward the Confessor, Harold and Queen Edith. The frontispiece to the volume is a reproduction in colours of a picture representing 'An English Coronation of the Fourteenth Century,' in the possession of the Master and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. We have not attempted in this notice to criticise the ability with which Mr. Legg has executed his task. To do so would be a little difficult in the space at our command. But we trust we have shown of what interesting material the volume is composed, and how attractive its contents must be to those of antiquarian inclination. Of the extreme industry of the author there is ample proof, and in view of the approaching coronation of King Edward VII. we may be sure that this work will rightly command wide attention.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'The Monastery of San Marco,' by G. S. Godkin. Though the Order of Dominican monks did not absolutely found the Monastery of San Marco—that event being attributable to the Silvestrini, or members of the Order of St. Silvestre, who for upwards of a century inhabited the building and did much good among the surrounding population, but afterwards, on account of their misdemeanours, fell away in public favour—the 'preaching friars,' as they were termed, are chiefly associated with its history, which forms, as Mr. Godkin well observes, one of the brightest pages in the annals of the fraternity. The volume consists of five chapters, four being respectively devoted to a consideration of those famous men and painters, Savonarola, St. Antonino, Fra Angelico, and Fra Bartolommeo, while the last treats of the history of the monastery subsequent to Savonarola's death. It is an interesting, well-written volume, illustrated with several reproductions of the frescoes by Fra Angelico at San Marco, as well as other illustrations.

From Mr. H. J. Drane.—'Borrel's Bog,' by Frederick Hainsworth. We are afraid the author of this addition to the 'St. Bride's Library' has yet much to learn before he can write a successful novel. Of imagination he is by no means devoid, but his knowledge of life and the skill which is necessary to the elaboration of fiction seem of the slightest.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'A Soldier of Virginia: a tale of Colonel Washington and Braddock's Defeat,' by Burton Egbert Stevenson. Those who like a good, lively novel full of spirited action and heroic deeds will be greatly entertained by Mr. Stevenson's work. The interest never flags, and the exuberant energy of the author fascinates his readers from first page to last. The story is one of incident rather than character-portrayal, and as such it may be warmly commended.

From Messrs. Gay & Bird.—'Light from the Summerland; being a series of articles illustrating the Truth and Teachings of Spiritualism,' by Lux Aurea. There is so much and such heterogeneous matter in this volume that it is difficult to know how to treat it. We are told the story of Julia's letters to Mr. W. T. Stead, of that gentleman's gift of automatic writing, 'in which the hand moves and writes without any conscious direction on his part, or any previous knowledge of what is written.' We are also told of the warm discussion on the Nature of the Supreme Being between a medium and the writer at Bathgate, when the medium all at once appeared to fall into a trance and then uttered a message from the Unseen, which the writer, seizing his notebook, recorded. It was as follows:—'Good evening. It is with no desire, we may assure you, to intrude upon your rather warm discussion, &c. &c.' We are treated to messages from Mr. Gladstone and are informed that 'it has been testified by more than one clairvoyant that the spirit form of Mr. Gladstone has been seen at Westminster Abbey and other places!' But enough. We note, on p. 10, what is possibly meant for a Scriptural quotation. It runs thus: 'True religion and undefiled is to visit the fatherless and widow and to keep oneself spotted from the world!'

From Mr. H. J. Glaisher.—'To the Women of England, and other Poems,' by George Barlow. A large number of the poems in this volume were written many years ago, and in some we seem to recognise the outpourings of the author's early poetic fervour. But there are many gems of extreme beauty, of exquisite fancy, and high-souled expression that cause the mind to linger long over the book after its covers have been closed. We quote the following, not as by any means the choicest specimen in the collection, but as being within our possibilities of space:

Hope dies in many a heart, as life grows older:
No more with young bright dazzled eyes we see
A thousand diamonds on each wave's white shoulder,
A thousand emeralds in each sun-kissed tree.

No more the road to heaven seems all placarded
From starlit side to side: 'Admission Free.'
Love, seeking woman's heart, is checked, retarded;
Winged Love must pause and pay his entrance fee.

A poor man toils to win a girl's devotion:
Some rich man wins her in a night, maybe!
Man's thoughts are rocks that breast time's tossing ocean,
But women's thoughts are changeful as the sea.

From Mr. William Heinemann.—'The Chatterbox of Parma,' translated from the French of De Stendhal by Lady Mary Loyd, with a Critical Introduction by Maurice Hewlett; 'Colombo' and 'Carmen,' translated from the French of Prosper Mérimée, by Lady Mary Loyd, with a Critical Introduction by Arthur Symonds. No two novelists could well be more dissimilar in style than Stendhal and Mérimée, whose works as titled above form the opening volumes in the new series projected by Mr. Heinemann under the general heading of 'A Century of French Romance,' the editor of which is Mr. Edmund Gosse. In an introduction remarkable for many clumsily constructed sentences Mr. Hewlett says that he 'soberly believes the "Chatterbox of Parma" to be the greatest novel of France.' This is unstinted praise indeed, and when we come to the reasons for Mr. Hewlett's pronouncement our astonishment is all the more profound, for the examples he deduces of Stendhal's genius seem to us but little to bear out the force of his contentions. It is a case, we fancy, of the writer's own tastes carrying him beyond the confines of sound criticism. However, that Stendhal was a great novelist and that his works are well worthy of study by English readers there can be no question, and in this account of the boyish escapades of the handsome Fabrizio, his adventures at the battle of Waterloo, subsequent imprisonment and love-making through his cell window, together with the passion of his aunt, the Duchess Sanseverina, they will find much to entertain and probably not a little to scandalise them. Truth to say, Stendhal did not write for boarding-school misses, and those who would hear only of the more moral aspects of Italian life must pass elsewhere.—The 'Colomba' of Prosper Mérimée is exceedingly enjoyable. It shows this novelist, we think, at his best. The story, it may be remembered, is one of Corsican life. Colomba is a young girl who has inherited all the narrow traditions of her race. Her father has been murdered, and she regards it as a solemn duty that her brother should avenge his death. Orso, on the contrary, who has been out of the island for some years on military service, is not so eager for revenge, and the story shows how the girl by the intensity of her passion gradually stimulates him to the proper frame of mind, and what comes of the vendetta. The interest is further heightened by the presence of an English colonel and his beautiful daughter, with whom Orso is in love. As regards 'Carmen,' most people have seen the opera of the same name, and are tolerably familiar with the nature of the story. Mr. Symonds's introduction to Mérimée is an excellent piece of work. Both volumes, we should mention, are very tastefully bound in blue cloth with gilt lettering, and each contains four coloured plates after water-colour drawings by Eugène Paul Avril and Parys; Mr. Gosse supplies a short 'life' of the author; and there are several portraits of Stendhal and Mérimée, with notes by Octave Uzanne. In the matter of production these instalments of 'A Century of French Romances' are irreproachable.

From Mr. R. L. Holmes.—'Cancer: its Cause and Cure,' by Robert Bell, M.D., F.F.P.S. 'If a little knowledge is a dangerous thing, how much more dangerous must crass ignorance be!' That is the opening sentence of Dr. Bell's preface, and he goes on to say that it is impossible to estimate the amount of suffering and anxiety which might cease to exist if only the public were better acquainted with the laws governing their health. He treats of Cancer and Influenza and states a few plain facts in a common-sense way; he is not too technical in his language, and all that he writes may be understood by the most unscientific reader. The author is well known as a writer on medical subjects, and though he has many startling things to say he may be relied upon as a trustworthy and accurate adviser.

From Messrs. Iliffe & Sons, Limited.—'The Year's Photographs, 1901,' Parts 1 to 5. This publication contains a selection of photographs from the two leading London exhibitions, the Royal Photographic Society and the Photographic Salon. As the examples are chosen for their excellence alone, and as we are assured that no pains have been spared, as indeed is evident at first sight, to make the work tasteful and attractive, the series when completed must prove a most valuable record and souvenir of this year's work of some of our leading photographic artists. Where all are good and so many excellent of these forty beautiful photographs, each of which is accompanied by an expository and critical note written by an artist of position, we shall not presume to particularise our own special favourites. About twelve parts, each containing eight photographs, will complete the work, which every photographer ought to possess.

From Messrs. Isbister & Co.—'Memoranda Paulina,' by George Jackson, B.A. The brief chapters that constitute this volume have already appeared in an unrevised form in Good Words. The author in his generous enthusiasm has seen fit to provide a separate chapter for each Sunday afternoon in the year, and we have no doubt that they will prove serviceable to that section of the public which likes to devote its hebdomadal leisure to the perusal of religious works.

From Mr. R. Brimley Johnson.—'Sonnets by Elizabeth Barrett Browning.' It is impossible to imagine a daintier or more charming reprint of these beautiful sonnets than this volume, which does credit to the Astolat Press, and to which the publisher has prefixed, with the artist's permission, Mr. G. F. Watts's well-known picture 'Love and Life' as a frontispiece.

From the same.—'Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam, the Astronomer-Poet of Persia; translated into English Verse by Edward Fitzgerald.' This is a reprint of the first edition of Edward Fitzgerald's translation printed at the Astolat Press, Guildford, and although the type is perfectly clear and legible, the elegant little volume could be carried in one's breast pocket. It is a thing of beauty.

From Mr. John Lane.—'Barchester Towers,' by Anthony Trollope. 'It is more years ago now than we care to remember since Anthony Trollope's works were first published in monthly parts, and were warmly discussed on their successive appearance in literary circles. 'Barchester Towers' is among what may be styled the clerical series. Dr. Proudie, Mrs. Proudie, the Rev. Slope, and above all the sensitive-dispositioned Mr. Harding, will be well within the recollection of older readers, who will heartily welcome this neat, well-printed pocket edition of their highly esteemed author's work.

From Mr. John Long.—'Forbidden Paths,' by Marcus Reay. Although the hero of this novel is said to have been a man who 'liked to look all round a subject before he made up his mind to act,' he does not seem to have been particularly judicious in his conduct towards Clare O'Hara, the beautiful woman of disreputable antecedents whom he is anxious to marry. However, she saves him from himself by running away on the eve of the event, and for a time is lost sight of. Conrad Lane after the lapse of some years marries a beautiful young girl, to whom he is devotedly attached. She, on her part, is despairingly adored by a boy lover. Conrad also has his own special admirer in a handsome widow. It will thus be seen that there is no lack of what has been termed the tender passion in the story. But further complications ensue. Clare suddenly makes her re-appearance on the scene as a popular actress, whose beauty, of course, has suffered no diminution with years. The boy lover falls under her spell. He takes Conrad with him to the theatre that he may approve of his taste. Conrad turns deadly pale on first beholding the star. In 'Madame Clarisse' he recognises his old love, Clare O'Hara. The actress now attempts to bring him back to his old allegiance, but is happily unsuccessful, and the story ends, after the good old conventional manner with her death, a reformed and repentant character. The author shows a marked tendency to exaggeration, and his knowledge of life is evidently derived from hearsay rather than actual study or experience.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'The Foundation of British East Africa,' by J. W. Gregory, D.Sc. The history of British East Africa, as Professor Gregory points out, may be considered under three aspects—geographical, political, and administrative. There is, first, the story of its exploration; next, the struggle for its possession; and, lastly, the beginning of its commercial development. These three histories he has interwoven into one connected narrative, telling as much of each as is necessary to explain the 'adventurous history of British East Africa from the voyages of the ancient merchants and Arab traders to the establishment of British rule.' It is not surprising that the names of Stanley and Lugard loom largely in the chronicle, and the author has much to say regarding Uganda and other missions. As to the future of British East Africa, Professor Gregory is hopeful, but sees considerable need for reform. The faults are not entirely human. The very geographical conditions of the country render its government from a distant office on second-hand knowledge of its wants exceedingly difficult. But the Foreign Office, with whom rests the control, might at least pursue a policy based on scientific knowledge of the country and its people, framed in accordance with the views of the local authorities as to what is practically and economically possible, and continuously and consistently carried out, even despite the prejudices of philanthropists at home and the ambitions of military officials abroad. Nor are the missionary societies, as may be imagined, altogether blameless. They might, it is pointed out, be more tolerant, less impatient in their demands for local reform, and interfere less in politics. Over a dozen illustrations give further interest to this tastefully bound volume, and there are two excellent maps; but nothing can compensate us for the want of an index, without which no work of importance should be published.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'The Churchman's Introduction to the Old Testament,' by Angus M. Mackay, B.A. ('The Churchman's Library.') Most religious-minded thinkers have found it difficult to reconcile the teachings of the Old Testament with the latest results of science, and have been perplexed, in the light of recent researches, as to what views they should accept, what regard as erroneous. To such students Mr. Mackay's book will prove exceedingly useful. It shows that our advanced thought is in no way antagonistic to the acceptance of the Old Testament writings; that 'if we set aside merely fantastic speculations and accept only what modern criticism has fairly established, the result is not loss but gain—a gain which may be thus summarised: innumerable difficulties inherent in the narrative under the old view are removed; the books gain in intelligibility by being placed in their right historical setting; and, above all, the divine economy of revelation, so to speak, is seen to possess a cohesion and an orderliness which were formerly lacking.' Mr. Mackay has carried out his work with great ability, and though we cannot altogether absolve him from straining a point here and there in order to make a compact argument, the value of this book as a guide both to layman and theologian is indisputable.

From Messrs. Morgan & Scott.—'Light from the Holy Hills: Lessons from Old Testament Mountains,' by Kenneth Moody-Stuart, M.A. We are inclined sometimes to think, seeing the number of sermons that are published, that the teaching of Holy Scripture is clouded by too much exposition—that the simple directness of the Bible is apt to be lost sight of amid the multitude of commentators. The idea is by no means a new one, for it was spoken of by a celebrated novelist, perhaps almost obtrusively, in his will; but with the large increase in the printed matter of to-day it appeals to the critical more forcibly. There is, however, nothing in these lessons of Mr. Moody-Stuart that can disturb the equilibrium of the orthodox; they are simply enlargements of general ideas displayed with much earnestness and feeling. The book should be of good service in many ways and have a far-reaching influence.

From Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd.—'Tales of Greyhouse,' by R. S. Warren Bell. Greyhouse was a public school noted for its pugilistic habits, which were winked at by the Head, Dr. Leicester; when, however, he was 'made a bishop, a new headmaster was appointed in his stead' who disapproved strongly of the 'noble art.' He enlisted the head monitor, Wardour, on his side by threatening to prevent his entering for a scholarship if he does not do all in his power to put down fighting in the school; but one day Wardour discovered a big fellow, Eccles by name, bullying a youngster. A fight ensued, and then Wardour promptly reported himself to the Head, who thereupon forbade him to enter for the scholarship. And so on. It is all good, sound, interesting reading, just the right sort for high-spirited boys, and nothing in the least mawkish or sentimental about it. The tales are really episodes in one continuous story, but each is complete in itself. Mr. T. M. R. Whewell's illustrations are excellent.

From Messrs. W. P. Nimmo, Hay & Mitchell, Edinburgh.—'Poetical Works of Alfred, Lord Tennyson, including In Memoriam, Maud, The Princess, Elaine, &c.' Admirably printed on thin paper, with a neat flexible binding, this is an edition that should strongly appeal to admirers of the poet who would desire to have his poems in a single volume of portable, convenient size. It is an excellent edition, worthy of high praise.

From Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd.—'Heads and How to Read Them: a Popular Guide to Phrenology,' by Stackpool E. O'Dell. Mr. O'Dell is a well-known authority on phrenology, and in this little volume he discourses very agreeably on the different varieties of head—the intellectual, perceptive, moral, domestic, imaginative, ambitious, and so forth. He then enters upon some general deductions derived from his subject, and speaks of the men women should marry and those they would do well to avoid, the women that make the best wives, the qualities that should be noted in choosing assistants and servants, and how to discern temperaments generally. Most of the peculiarities he alludes to are further emphasised by illustrations, and the reader should be able to derive much interesting information from the volume.

From Mr. James Robinson, Manchester.—'The Church in the Fort, and other Sermons,' by David James Burrell, D.D. These are admirable examples of earnest thought and sound, practical reasoning. The style is crisp, clear, and exceedingly convincing. As expositions of important passages in the Scriptures they may be confidently recommended to the devout-minded.

From Messrs. Skeffington & Son.—'Athirst the Downs: a Tale of Church Folk,' by A. J. Davies. The reader who would listen to a recital of turbulent passion or have his imagination worked up to fever heat by wildly sensational episode will find little to attract him in this story, which is one of quiet life, combined with considerable religious colouring. But it is by no means wanting in interest for those who prefer to see things as they are rather than through distorted spectacles, and by such we are sure the actions of Tom Peacey and Nella in their Sussex retreat, with the thoughts that gave rise to them, will be fraught with pleasurable interest.

From Mr. Arthur H. Stockwell.—'Strange Voices,' by C. H. Perry. The excellent idea of selecting familiar things such as 'banner,' 'cistern,' 'lamp,' 'salt,' 'wind,' &c., &c., and making them speak in simple language for boys and girls in the first person, has been carried out by Mr. Perry with good effect. His little talks are moral and instructive and not too long; indeed, he seems to know his audience well, for he never tires them, but makes each chat of just the right length. He does not 'preach,' but possesses the happy knack of improving the mind whilst seemingly engaged merely in amusing it.

From the Unicorn Press.—'A Narrative of the Mutiny on board his Majesty's Ship "Bounty," &c.,' written by Lieutenant William Bligh. This is a reprint made 'At the Sign of the Unicorn' of the original edition, with its frontispiece and charts, as first published by George Nicol, Pall Mall, in 1790, and we do not know much better reading for those fond of tales of the sea than this truthful narrative of brave Lieutenant Bligh, which can be easily read through during one of the long evenings now before us. From the second page of the narrative, where we read of Mr. Christian, the master's mate, coming into the captain's cabin, and, with his confederates, seizing and pinioning Lieutenant Bligh, until the end of perils of the loyal officers and men is reached we follow the fortunes of the good boat and her eighteen brave men with breathless interest. They must have been hale as well as brave, otherwise their miserable allowance of one 25th of a pound of bread and a quarter of a pint of water at breakfast, dinner, and supper had never sustained them for so long and through such weather.

From Messrs. Vinton & Co., Limited.—'Live Stock Journal Almanac, 1902.' This, as usual, contains a large number of interesting and suitable articles, combined with a variety of information relating to live-stock progress during the past year. Sir Walter Gilbey writes of the 'Size of Horses,' Professor Wortley Aze of 'Some Habits and Vices of Horses,' Sir R. D. Green Price on 'The Influence of Royal Patronage on Agriculture,' Prince Sheldon 'Concerning Cows and their Milk,' Mr. Vero Shaw of 'The Saleable Horse,' and there are papers on thoroughbreds, Cleveland bays and Yorkshire coach-horses, hackneys, ponies, hunters, Suffolks, Clydesdales, and almost every breed of cattle and sheep. 'Shire Horses in 1901,' 'Shorthorns in 1901,' 'Sheep in 1901,' and 'Pigs in 1901' furnish valuable records of the past year. Altogether the number, both in point of reading matter, illustrations, and suitability of contents, will favourably compare with previous annuals issued by our contemporary.

From Mr. G. Walpole, 58 Talgarth Road, W.—'The Extra Parliamentary Hansard, containing a selection of the speeches made by public men outside Parliament, letters of public men appearing in the Press, resolutions of representative bodies or individuals, and records of bye-elections.' Vol. II., September 1900 to September 1901. One cannot but be struck by the large amount of matter that has been compressed into this volume and the painstaking care shown in its compilation. Mr. Walpole, the editor, has evidently ever been on the alert during the year to cull appropriate 'copy' from the most reliable newspapers, and the result is a political record that without aspiring to the definition of 'official' has an interest and value that can scarcely be exaggerated. About a third of the volume is occupied with general election speeches, including those of Mr. A. J. Balfour, Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, Sir William Harcourt, Mr. T. W. Russell, Professor Bryce, and Mr. Wyndham; but the most interesting portion is undoubtedly that which contains the different pronouncements on the war, which read now, after the lapse of some time, afford subject for most useful reflection. These records in 'guid black print' must prove intensely annoying to some people who are prone to rush to hasty conclusions, and Mr. Walpole may be congratulated on so excellently carrying out a task that is calculated to be of discomfiture to both political parties.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co., Limited.—'From Deal to South Africa,' by Helen C. Black. We are afraid these sketches, in the technicology of the trade, will be voted a little 'thin.' No doubt as contributions among other matter in the magazines in which they previously appeared they were interesting enough, but as framework for a separate volume they are lacking in substance. The authoress during her holiday seems to have cultivated a very agreeable acquaintance with Deal boatmen, and in other respects appears a woman quick to receive impressions, which she relates in a frank, outspoken manner; and this is all we need say about her book, except that the title is a little misleading.

NEW EDITIONS.—Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons have now completed the publication of their delightful Warwick Edition of George Eliot's novels by adding to it 'The Spanish Gypsy' and 'Jubal,' forming the eleventh volume, and 'Theophrastus Such' and 'Essays,' forming the twelfth and final volume. From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Company Ltd., we have received four volumes of their new uniform edition of the Novels of George Meredith in 15 pocket volumes, printed on specially prepared paper. The volumes before us contain 'The Ordeal of Richard Feverel,' 'Beauchamp's Career,' 'The Egoist,' and 'Diana of the Crossways.'—Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have sent out a further volume in their new and uniform edition of Mr. F. Marion Crawford's novels. This, the latest addition to the series, is 'A Rose of Yesterday,' one of the most characteristic of the author's works. We have also received from the same publishers 'A Romance of Canvas Town,' by Rolf Boldrewood, excellently printed, papered, and bound. It forms a welcome addition to their 'Three-and-Sixpenny Library.'

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

. In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo., royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: inch = 2.54 centimetres.

BOOKS WANTED

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

THE WARWICK SHAKESPEARE

GENERAL EDITOR—

Prof. C. H. HERFORD, Litt.D.,

Examiner in English to London University, Cambridge Local Examination Board, &c.

The ATHENEUM says:—'No better edition could be found either for the class teacher or for the solitary student.'
The JOURNAL OF EDUCATION says:—'We heartily recommend this edition.'

The EDUCATIONAL TIMES says:—'We have seldom met with a school Shakespeare in which the writer has so completely succeeded in placing himself in the position of the intelligent student his book is designed to guide.'

MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM. Edited by E. K. CHAMBERS, M.A. 1s. 6d.

The ACADEMY says:—'It is wonderfully rich in illustrative matter, and no aspect or interest of the play is neglected. In his treatment of chronological and historical questions Mr. Chambers is modestly convincing and delightfully sane: two rare praises for Shakespearian scholars. In brief, here is an edition to be unreservedly recommended.'

APPROVED SCHOOL BOOKS BY DR. CORNWELL, F.R.G.S.

'We are qualified by ample trial of the books in our own classes to speak to their great efficiency and value. We have never known so much interest evinced or so much progress made as since we have employed these as our school books.'—EDUCATIONAL TIMES.

A SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY. 89th Edition, 3s. 6d.; or with Thirty Maps, 5s. 6d.

'Very superior to the common run of such books. It contains a good deal of useful matter of a more practical kind than usual, which the exercises are likely to impress on the mind more deeply than by the parrot system.'—ATHENÆUM.

A SCHOOL ATLAS. Consisting of Thirty Small Maps. A companion Atlas to the Author's 'School Geography.' 2s. 6d., or 4s. coloured.

GEOGRAPHY FOR BEGINNERS. 68th Edition, 1s.; or, with 48 pp. of Questions, 1s. 4d. Questions, 6d.

'A very useful Series of Educational Works, of which Dr. Cornwell is either author or editor. It ("The Geography for Beginners") is an admirable introduction. There is a vast difficulty in writing a good elementary book, and Dr. Cornwell has shown himself possessed of that rare combination of faculties which is required for the task.'—JOHN BULL.

POETRY FOR BEGINNERS: a Selection of Short and Easy Poems for Reading and Recitation. 13th Edition, 1s.

ALLEN AND CORNWELL'S SCHOOL GRAMMAR. 65th Edition, 2s. red leather; or 1s. 9d. cloth.

'The excellence of the Grammar published by the late Dr. Allen and Dr. Cornwell makes us almost despair of witnessing any decided improvement in this department.'—ATHENÆUM.

GRAMMAR FOR BEGINNERS: an Introduction to Allen and Cornwell's 'School Grammar.' 88th Edition, 1s. cloth; 9d. sewed.

'This simple Introduction is as good a book as can be used.'—SPECTATOR.

THE BOOK is enlarged by a Section on Word-Building, with Exercises for Young Children.

THE YOUNG COMPOSER: Progressive Exercises in English Composition. 48th Edition, 1s. 6d. KEY, 3s.

'The plan of the work is very superior. We are persuaded this little work will be found invaluable to the intelligent instructor.'—WESTMINSTER REVIEW.

SPELLING FOR BEGINNERS: a Method of Teaching Reading and Spelling at the Same Time. 4th Edition, 1s.

THE SCIENCE OF ARITHMETIC: Systematic Course of Numerical Reasoning and Computations. With very numerous Exercises. By JAMES CORNWELL, Ph.D., and Sir JOSHUA G. FITCH, LL.D. 26th Edition. 4s. 6d.

'The best work on arithmetic which has yet appeared. It is both scientific and practical in the best and fullest sense.'—LONDON QUARTERLY.

KEY to SCIENCE OF ARITHMETIC. With the Method of Solution to every Question. 4s. 6d.

SCHOOL ARITHMETIC. 18th Edition. 1s. 6d. KEY, 4s. 6d.

'Eminently practical, well stored with examples of wider range and more varied character than are usually given in such books, and, its method of treatment being thoroughly inductive, it is pre-eminently the book for general use.'—ENGLISH JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

ARITHMETIC FOR BEGINNERS. Combines simplicity and fulness in teaching the First Four Rules and Elementary Fractions. 9th Edition. 1s.

'Recommended to all who are interested in the introduction into our schools of real and profitable art training.'—ATHENÆUM.

'It contains all that elementary teachers will be able to make use of.'—SCHOOL GUARDIAN.

THE BIBLE FOR THE YOUNG. A Series for Schools and Families. By Rev. J. PATERSON SMYTH, B.D., LL.D., Author of 'How we got our Bible,' 'How God inspired the Bible,' 'How to read the Bible,' 'The Old Documents and the New Bible,' &c.

THE GUARDIAN says of first volume—'Packed with thought. Very far above the average standard of Sunday-school lessons.' Similarly warm appreciation is expressed by THE RECORD, LITERARY WORLD, BOOKMAN, &c., &c.

The aim of this series is expressed by the Latin motto in the Introduction—Placere—Docere—Movere. 1st. To make the Bible characters live before the child. 3rd. To move his heart to definite high purposes. But it is under the 2nd head (Docere) that the chief characteristic of the series appears—the effort, running all through, to save the child from scepticism in after-life by guarding him against the crude and narrow teaching of the Bible in his childhood.

The old plan was to wait till religious difficulties had made people unbelievers, and then give them books of Christian evidence to win them back by explaining that their childhood's teaching had not been quite correct, and must now be modified by a broader and slightly different view. This series tries the other method of not exposing them to unbelief.

'WILL YE LOOSE YOUR SCHOOLS TO FLOUT THEM
TILL THE BROW-BEAT COLUMNS
MELT?'

KIPLING'S 'THE ISLANDERS.'

Mr. Kipling is an angler, and it is a pity that by the use of flouts and jeers he should have somewhat spoilt the effect of his recent appeal to Britons to learn to use the rifle as well as to play cricket and football, to shoot, and to fish.

Probably Mr. Kipling had fully calculated the effect of his words, for no man has the interests of his country more deeply at heart, and it looks as if he had deliberately chosen to risk his own popularity by using epithets which he well knew would provoke resentment. He must have despaired of getting attention by any ordinary means, so he took his trusty greenheart fishing rod from its case and laid it across the broad shoulders of John Bull and his sons with such effect that he made the whole Empire ring with its sting.

Mr. Kipling's stirring lines have been construed in some quarters as an argument for compulsory service, but we do not believe he had this in view; his appeal is to a much nobler form of military service; he wants every man in the Empire to feel that it is his duty to be able to defend it if called upon to do so. He quotes a letter from an officer in South Africa, who says:—

'It is simply awful that after two years you send us out men who have to be tought to shoot and ride. It is like expecting a Board School boy to play in a County Eleven.'

In the lines we have quoted as the heading of this article Mr. Kipling asks sarcastically if we expect our cricket- and football-playing schools will be able to repel the invader. In reply to this question we have only to point to the thousands of British soldiers who have been killed or wounded in South Africa by the deadly aim of Boer boys and youths. If the aim is true, a bullet is just as deadly when fired by a lad of fifteen as by a man of fifty.

Compulsory military service is a thing we should not object to see enforced in this country, though we do not expect to see it. But there is another way by which the same end can be attained, and its attainment rests very largely in the hands of those men who have undertaken and been entrusted with the education of our youth.

If the headmasters of our schools and colleges throughout the Empire would give practical effect to that feeling of loyalty and patriotism which exists nowhere more strongly than in their ranks, they would

'TEACH THE YOUNG IDEA HOW TO SHOOT.'

Many of them, we rejoice to say, are already doing so; but if it were done by all, by scores of thousands instead of by merely scores or hundreds, then in less than a year compulsory military service would be unnecessary, as we hope it always may be.

In conversation with masters of schools and colleges we have found that it is chiefly their want of knowledge of the fact that recent inventions in fire-arms have done away with all difficulty and nearly all cost in teaching boys the use of the rifle, which has prevented their forming a rifle class and then a rifle corps.

We speak from practical experience when we say that almost any average boy of ten can learn how to use our present national arm in a few weeks. This was impossible until very recently, because the large-bore heavy Snider or Martini could be used only at some secluded rifle range in the country, and the recoil was a terror even to men. But with the Lee-Enfield small-bore, and the miniature charges, bullets, and targets recently invented, practice, and first-rate practice, with the rifle can be carried on in a playground, or even a shed, if there is a brick wall at one end of it. Of course due precautions must be taken, but as an ounce of practical evidence is worth a ton of theory, we may mention that after giving a lad of fifteen a few lessons and an hour's practice a day for a week or two, in a suburban garden, he knew how to make a bull's-eye among the first half-dozen shots he fired at the Runnymede rifle ranges. His brother, a youngster of ten, could hit the bull's-eye three times out of five at a hundred yards after a week or two's practice, and, moreover, was thoroughly conversant with the operations of loading and unloading, as well as cleaning the weapon. The fact is that it is such fascinating work a boy willingly gives his whole attention to it; he wants to become a good shot; and when a boy wants to do a thing the difficulty is to prevent him doing it.

And the boy who learns to use the rifle at school as a natural part of his education will join a rifle club, or start one when he leaves school, and will then be ready to pass if need be into a volunteer or regular corps.

The old idea, that the soldier was no good unless he had been drilled until he was a sort of put-a-penny-in-the-slot-to-see-me-work machine, has been exploded by our long war with the absolutely undrilled farmers of the late Boer Republics. Skill with the rifle acquired by the Boer boy practising at bottles on his father's farm is what—with the confidence inspired by that skill—has cost this country so dearly in blood and treasure. Had the Boer army been trained at Aldershot the war would have been over in a month. Fas est et ab hoste doceri.

It is not flattering to nearly 2,000 years of Christian civilisation that general education in the art of war should be an imperative necessity for Great and Greater Britain. But it is folly to blink at the fact that, unless we are not merely willing, of which there is no question, but also able to defend our Empire, we shall lose it.

Practical and combined action on the part of heads of schools and colleges at home on this vital question would be welcomed in Canada, Australasia, India, South Africa, and wherever our flag flies on the earth. If those at home who have the education of the 'Coming Man' in hand do not set the example, their colleagues in the colonies will presently do it for them.

Even colleges like Eton, Harrow, Dulwich, and others which have Rifle Cadet Corps might do far more to make them popular than they do, and the War Office could help by special grants of arms and ammunition as a reward for proficiency.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

'William Black, Novelist: a Memoir,' is the title of the biography by Sir Wemyss Reid of his friend Mr. Wm. Black, author of 'A Daughter of Heth' &c. The work promises to be of exceptional interest and will be published this spring.

The Macmillan Company have taken over the publication of a series of six volumes on Algebra by Professors Fisher and Schwatt, of the University of Pennsylvania. It comprises 'Rudiments of Algebra'; 'School Algebra with Exercises'; Complete 'Secondary Algebra'; 'Quadratics and Beyond'; 'Higher Algebra'; and Part I. of a 'Text Book of Algebra with Exercises.'

In consequence of the large additional orders which have reached them for the December number of the Quiver, Messrs. Cassell & Company have been obliged to put in hand a reprint of the number. Copies will be ready shortly.

The whole of the 'English Dialect Dictionary,' consisting of about 4,700 pages, contained in six volumes, will be completed before the end of 1905. Four of the six volumes are already printed, viz. Vol. I. (A to C), Vol. II. (D to G), Vol. III. (H to L), Vol. IV. (M to Q); Vol. V. (R, S) is now being printed, and will be finished in November. Vol. VI. will consist of the letters T to Z, the Supplement, the Bibliography of the many thousands of books specially excerpted for the Dictionary, and a Comprehensive Comparative Grammar of all the dialects treated historically. This important work is published by Mr. Henry Frowde.

Among Messrs. Sampson Low's new books this spring will be 'Five Great Painters of the Victorian Era,' by Sir Wyke Bayliss, K.B., F.S.A., President of the Royal Society of British Artists. The author has had the advantage of a personal acquaintance with each of his subjects, which include Sir Frederick Leighton, Sir J. E. Millais, E. Burne-Jones, G. F. Watts, and W. Holman Hunt.

Professors Katherine Coman and Elizabeth Kendall publish with the Macmillan Company a short 'History of England' for use in schools. The book is intended for America, but the intelligence of its arrangement and its copious supply of interesting illustrations may commend it to English teachers.

Mr. Stephen Phillips is the subject of the Literature supplement last week, with portrait. According to the writer of the very eulogistic notice, Mr. Phillips is 'that extremely rare creature, a real poet who is also popular.'

Mrs. Mary E. Mann's new novel, 'The Mating of a Dove,' is to be published by Mr. Fisher Unwin next week in his 'Green Cloth Library,' and will make the fifth novel from her pen published in that series.

The Universal Magazine for January starts off with an interesting article by the Parliamentary writer for the Daily News, Mr. H. W. Massingham, on 'Men who lead us.' Curiously enough Mr. Massingham says: 'The most interesting of these men is Lord Salisbury. I confess I would rather listen to Lord Salisbury than to any of his contemporaries. . . . He is a shrewd thinker, who measures men and their motives more accurately than some of his colleagues and his adversaries.'

Miss M. Bentinck Smith, of Girton, has prepared for publication with Messrs. Macmillan & Co. a translation of Ten Brink's famous work on the language and metre of Chaucer.

Andrew Lang will deal destructively, in the Monthly Review for February, with the text of Mrs. Gallup's 'Autobiography of Francis Bacon' as disclosed in the so-called 'Bi-literal Cypher.'

The discussion on the teaching of Mathematics, held at the British Association in 1901, has been edited from the reports and published by Mr. John Perry, whose address opened the proceedings. He adds his reply to criticisms at the end of the volume now published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co.

'The University Song Book' is the title of a collection of songs, with musical setting, to be published by Mr. Grant Richards immediately. The book may be described as an anthology of the best songs of the various universities; but many other sources have been drawn upon, and the object of the book is to attempt to establish a literature of students' songs which shall meet the wants of singers in every part of the Empire.

Some remarkably high, and in several cases record, prices were realised in a sale of rare books at Messrs. Hodgson & Co.'s rooms in Chancery Lane last week, the more important of which are noticed in another column. The most noticeable advances in prices were given for uncut copies of scarce first editions, and books with coloured plates.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. publish 'A College Text Book of Chemistry,' by Dr. Remsen, President of the Johns Hopkins University, designed to fill a place between the introduction to the study of chemistry and the more advanced 'Inorganic Chemistry.'

Messrs. Greening & Co. have in active preparation the first volume of their 'Year Book of the Stage.' This should be a useful book for all who take an interest in theatrical matters. It will give brief criticisms and casts of all new productions and important revivals from 1898, when Mr. William Archer's annual, 'The Theatrical World,' ceased to appear, down to the end of 1901. The work of compilation is being done by Mr. Justin Hannaford and Mr. L. Arthur Greening.

A simple Church History, entitled 'A Goodly Heritage,' by Miss G. M. Forde, with a preface by Canon Benham, will be issued immediately by Messrs. Skeffington.

Although only published last week, Mr. Maxwell's book on the Royal tour, entitled 'With the "Ophir" Round the Empire,' is already being reprinted to meet the large demand.

A new serial story of humour and incident, entitled 'Honour at Stake: a Deep-laid Plot and its Foiling,' by Mr. H. Barrow North, commenced in Chums for January 15.

An edition of Todhunter's 'Spherical Trigonometry,' revised and brought up to date by Mr. J. G. Leathem, Fellow of St. John's, Cambridge, is now issued by Messrs. Macmillan & Co.

The same publishers have ready a third edition of Professor H. Sidgwick's 'Principles of Political Economy,' with slight additions and alterations made in accordance with the author's latest directions.

ABERDEEN PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Mr. G. M. Fraser, Librarian of the Aberdeen Public Library, has some interesting notes in his Report for the year 1900-01.

The total number of recorded issues for the year was 327,394—an increase of 29,036 over the previous year.

With reference to these issues, special attention may be drawn to one item—the issues in the juvenile section.* Nearly ten thousand volumes additional were issued in that section last year, an increase of about one-fourth on the total juvenile issues. That result has arisen without any special effort beyond the periodic addition to the section of a moderate supply of the very best obtainable juvenile literature. It indicates, however, that, with adequate accommodation and ampler means to deal with this particular section, a very great deal more might be done among the many thousands of juveniles in the city who have not yet come under the healthy influence of the public library. Fortunately, the importance of the subject is being increasingly recognised. Quite recently the School Board appointed a committee to consider the question of juvenile reading, and possibly this may open the way to the establishment of a system of school libraries, which, partly in this country but to a larger extent in the United States, have been markedly successful in guiding and stimulating the reading of the young.

An interesting and, we believe, novel feature of the Report is a table showing the kinds of books taken out by different kinds of borrowers. For instance, in one case, No. 11, a labourer, resident in St. Nicholas Ward, whose last thirty books from the library consisted of two books in science, one in philology, two in sociology, three poetry, three philosophy, eleven theology, and eight fiction. Another rather remarkable case is No. 20, an upholsterer, whose reading, in a period of about two years, consisted of one book in science, one in useful arts, two in history, five in biography, and twenty-six books of travel. A fair example of perhaps the best reading from the library is shown in No. 14, a student, who had out in succession Stopford Brooke's 'Tennyson,' Cardinal Newman's 'Lectures and Essays on University Subjects,' Augustine Birrell's 'Res Judicata,' Sir Morell Mackenzie's 'Hygiene of the Vocal Organs,' Gregory Smith's 'Literature of the Transition Period,' Friedländer's 'Jewish Religion,' Robert Louis Stevenson's 'Memories and Portraits,' and Sidney Colvin's biography of Keats.

In the list given of particular books, and the number of times issued during the year, a noteworthy feature in regard to fiction is the continued constant demand shown to exist for the works of the classic writers. The six copies of 'Ivanhoe' were issued 162 times. The same number of copies of 'David Copperfield' went out 172 times; 'Vanity Fair,' 164; and the issues of each of George Eliot's works range from 120 to 160 times for the year.

'RARIORA.'

Under the title 'Rariora' Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. announce a work which will be of the greatest interest to collectors and all interested in the arts and crafts of the fifteenth and later centuries.

The aim of the author has been to afford to the public, collectors and non-collectors alike, the opportunity of making themselves to some extent acquainted with the contents of a rather unusually diversified and extensive collection, the formation of which has occupied more than forty years. It consists of books, manuscripts, autographs, historical documents, literary forgeries, broadsides, engravings, playing cards, trade cards, ex libris, early newspapers, coins, medals, tokens, early English pottery, marquetry in coloured straw, objects in pewter and horn, &c.; as well as of Curiosa of many kinds, the existence of some of which has hitherto been wholly or in part unnoticed in print. Of the bulk of this collection comprising many thousands of individual items, and naturally arranging itself under more than a hundred subdivisions, it has been possible to give only a short description. This rapid survey, which has been brought within the closest possible compass, occupies about 100 pages and is illustrated by half-tone blocks of a selection of some of the more remarkable objects. Four subjects have, however, been treated in detail, viz. Incunabula (books printed before A.D. 1500), English Historical Broadsides, Books and Engravings connected with early Firework Displays, and Lusus Naturæ (natural portraits in cut and polished stones).

In connection with the Incunabula a résumé has been given for the reader's guidance of the still uninterminated and apparently interminable discussions which have for centuries surrounded the question of the dawn of typography; and a number of facsimiles of the earliest documents illustrative of the controversy and of the very earliest printed matter are inserted, most of which will be new to the reader, having been in many cases specially photographed for this work from the originals. In addition, fully illustrated chapters will be found on Wooden Types and on the Evolution of the Type Mould; these contain matter entirely original and based upon a large number of experiments carried out by the author, and close imitations of the very earliest productions of the press printed for the first time from types made in accordance with what is known, or may be reasonably conjectured, of the methods of the earliest type-founders. Most of the Incunabula in the collection (A.D. 1466-1500) are described bibliographically, with copious notes on author and printer, accompanied by a large number of facsimiles of specimens (many in colours) of the productions of the various presses, of the quaint engravings with which some of the rarest volumes are adorned, and of the watermarks in the paper on which they are printed.

Of the 850 English Historical Broadsides in the collection (A.D. 1553-1803) about 200 have been pretty fully described in 152 pages at the beginning of the second volume.

Although this collection is by no means the largest, it is in some respects the most important in existence, as containing a large number (87) of unique broadsides, and a still larger number (88) of those of which only a very few are known and are thus extremely rare. It has been, by the kindness of Lord Crawford, most carefully collated with his indispensable lists. Facsimiles of rare or unique broadsides have been given where desirable, and those have been selected for description which furnish stepping-stones to the history of the times in which they appeared.

The early history of Fireworks for War and Recreation, a subject which has hitherto received inadequate notice, is in the 86 pages of the next section of the second volume pretty fully treated in two divisions: the first containing an illustrated notice of the books in the collection (A.D. 1529-1830) which discourse on the subject of the early manufacture and use of fireworks military and recreative; the second, a chronological notice of most of the 206 prints of firework displays (A.D. 1520-1814) in the author's possession—a unique collection as far as this country is concerned.

The last few pages are occupied by a short historical notice of the extremely rare mineralogical curiosities known as lusus naturæ—accidental resemblances to natural objects found in cutting and polishing certain stones, such as agates and flints—and by a description, accompanied by carefully-executed facsimiles in colours, of the greater part of those which compose the author's collection, undoubtedly, it is believed, the largest in existence. Copious indexes are annexed to the various sections of the whole work, which, it is hoped, will be ready for publication in April.

The work will be in two volumes, demy 4to., printed on Van Gelder paper, with over 500 illustrations, in autogravure, autotype, half-tone and relief.

A specimen of one of the ornamental borders will be found with the advertisement of the work.

'PEARSON'S MAGAZINE.'

Last week we quoted, on the authority of the London Press, a statement to the effect that Pearson's Magazine had changed hands. We understand that under the same title there are two 'Pearson's Magazines,' one edited in London and one in New York; and that all that has happened is that the English company of C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd., have sold part of their interest in the separate American issue. The magazine as published in this country, so successfully, remains the property of Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd., as heretofore.

THE CONNOISSEUR.

The proprietors of the Connoisseur beg to announce that they are preparing a fourth reprint of No. 1, September issue, and a second edition of Nos. 2 and 3, and that all orders will be supplied as soon as possible.

ROYAL PRESENTATION COPIES OF THE PRAYER-BOOK.

The royal 8vo. LARGE TYPE copies of the Cambridge University Press revised edition of the Book of Common Prayer, recently presented to the Royal Family, were exquisite specimens of binding in selected levant morocco, antique, bevelled boards, with white watered silk linings set as panels in crushed morocco with tooling in gold, solid red under gold edges. The copies presented to the King and Queen were bound in royal red levant, those for the Prince and Princess in royal blue.

BERNARD LINTOT, 1674-1735,

AND

HENRY LINTOT, 1709-1758

(FATHER & SON).

Bernard was the son of John Lintot, of Horsham in Sussex, yeoman. The date of his birth is not given, but as he died at the age of 61, in the year 1735, he must have been born about 1674. Nor have I found any account of his boyhood or his early education. He was about sixteen when he was bound apprentice at Stationers' Hall to Thomas Lingard, December 4, 1690—turned over to John Harding 169, and made free March 18th, 1699.

Dunton says of this Mr. Harding: 'Without flattery, he deserves to be called a very courteous man, of a lovely proportion, extremely well made, as handsome a man, and as good an air, as perhaps few of his neighbours exceed him.'

Bernard Lintot, soon after his freedom, commenced business as a bookseller, at the sign of 'The Cross Keys,' between the Temple Gates, where he was patronised by many of the most eminent writers of a period which has been styled the Augustan Age of English Literature.

Among his earliest publications was a work by Thomas D'Urfey, gentleman, in 1704, entitled 'Tales, Tragical and Comical.' Judged by their titles, these tales were of a licentious or scandalous character. Dunton says of them and of the publisher: 'Lintot lately published a collection of tragic tales, by which I perceive he is angry with the world, and scorns it into the bargain; and I cannot blame him, for D'Urfey both treats it and esteems it as it deserves; too hard a task for those whom it flatters, or perhaps for Bernard himself, should the world ever change its humour, and grin upon him. However, to do Mr. Lintot justice, he is a man of very good principles, and I dare engage will never want an author of Sol-fa, as long as the playhouse will encourage his comedies.'

In 1709 he published 'Oxford and Cambridge Miscellany Poems,' and in 1714 he reprinted the Miscellanies, with several poems by Mr. Pope, also by Dryden, Swift, Gay, &c. The same year he entered into a very liberal agreement with Mr. Pope for his translation of Homer's 'Iliad,' the printing of which was undertaken by Mr. Bowyer.

It was about this time, when evidently the author and publisher were on very good terms—that is, between the months of Sept. 1715 and Feb. 1716—that Mr. Pope wrote a most amusing though rather sarcastic letter (evidently not intended for publication) to the Earl of Burlington, in which he describes his old friend Bernard Lintot, and, although the letter is well known and has been frequently quoted, I make no apology for quoting it again nearly at its full length. 'I know nothing in our language,' says Dr. Warton, 'that equals it':

'My Lord; if your mare could speak, she would give you an account of what extraordinary company she had on the road; which since she cannot do, I will. It was the enterprising Mr. Lintot, the redoubtable rival of Mr. Tonson, who, mounted on a stone-horse (no disagreeable companion to your Lordship's mare), overtook me in Windsor Forest. He said he heard I designed for Oxford, the seat of the Muses, and would, as my bookseller, by all means, accompany me thither.

'I asked him where he got his horse? He answered he got it of his Publisher *; for that rogue, my printer (said he), disappointed me;

* Lintot being himself a publisher, this probably means someone in his employ.

I hoped to put him in good humour by a treat at the tavern, of a brown fricassee of rabbits, which cost two shillings, with two quarts of wine, besides my conversation. I thought myself cocksure of his horse, which he readily promised me, but said that Mr. Tonson had just such another design of going to Cambridge, expecting there the copy of a new kind of Horace from Dr. —, and if Mr. Tonson went he was pre-engaged to attend, being to have the printing of the said copy. "So in short, I borrowed this stone-horse of my Publisher, which he had of Mr. Oldmixon for a debt; he lent me, too, the pretty boy you see after me; he was a smutty dog yesterday, and cost me near two hours to wash the ink off his face; but the Devil is a fair-conditioned Devil, and very forward in his catechism; if you have any more bags he shall carry them." I gave the boy a small bag, containing three shirts and an Elzevir Virgil; and mounting in an instant proceeded on the road, with my man before, my courteous stationer beside, and the aforesaid Devil behind.

"Mr. Lintot began in this manner: "Now, d— them! what if they should put it into the newspapers, how you and I went together to Oxford? what would I care? If I should go down into Sussex, they would say I was gone to the Speaker. But what of that? If my son were but big enough to go on with the business, by — I would keep as good company as old Jacob."

"Hereupon I inquired of his son. "The lad," says he, "has fine parts, but is somewhat sickly, much as you are. I spare for nothing in his Education at Westminster. Pray, don't you think Westminster to be the best school in England? Most of the late Ministry came out of it, and so did many of this Ministry. I hope the boy will make his fortune."

"Don't you design to let him pass a year at Oxford?" "To what purpose?" (said he). "The Universities do but make Pedants, and I intend to breed him a man of business."

"As Mr. Lintot was talking, I observed he sat uneasy on his saddle, for which I expressed some solicitude. "Nothing," says he, "I can bear it well enough: but since we have the day before us, methinks, it would be very pleasant for you to rest awhile under the woods." When we were alighted, "See here what a mighty pretty Horace I have in my pocket! what if you amused yourself by turning an Ode, till we mount again? Lord! if you pleased, what a clever Miscellany might you make at leisure hours?" "Perhaps I may," said I, "if we ride on, the motion is an aid to my fancy, a round trot very much awakens my spirits; then jog on apace, and I'll think as hard as I can—"

"Silence ensued for a full hour, after which Mr. Lintot hugged the reins, stopped short, and broke out: "Well, sir, how far have you gone?" I answered seven miles. "Zounds, sir," said Lintot, "I thought you had done seven stanzas. Oldisworth, in a ramble round Wimbledon-Hill, would translate a whole Ode in half this time. I'll say that for Oldisworth (though I lost by his Timothy's), he translates an ode of Horace the quickest of any man in England. I remember Dr. King would write verses in a tavern three hours after he could not speak; and there's Sir Richard, in that rumbling old chariot of his, between Fleet Ditch and St. Giles' Pond, shall make you half a Job."

"Pray Mr. Lintot" (said I), "now you talk of translators, what is your method of managing them?" "Sir" (replied he), "those are the saddest pack of rogues in the world; in a hungry fit, they'll swear they understand all the languages in the universe; I have known one of them take down a Greek book upon my counter, and cry, 'Ah!

this is Hebrew, I must read it from the latter end.' By — I can never be sure in these fellows, for I neither understand Greek, Latin, French, nor Italian myself. But this is my way. I agree with them for 10s. per sheet, with a proviso that I will have their doings corrected by whom I please; so by one or other they are led at last to the true sense of an author; my judgment giving the negative to all my translators. . . . I'll tell you what happened to me last month; I bargained with S— for a new version of Lucretius, to publish against Tonson's; agreeing to pay the author so many shillings at his producing so many lines. He made great progress in very short time, and I gave it to the corrector to compare with the Latin; but he went directly to Creech's translation, and found it the same word for word, all but the first page. Now what d'ye think I did? I arrested the translator for a cheat; nay, and I stopped the corrector's pay too, upon the proof that he had made use of Creech instead of the original."

"Pray tell me next how you deal with the Critics?" "As for the poor Critics," says he, "I'll give you one instance of my management by which you may guess at the rest."

"A lean man, that looked like a very good scholar, came to me t'other day; he turned over your Homer, shook his head, shrugged his shoulders, and pish'd at every line of it; 'One would wonder,' says he, 'at the strange presumption of some men: Homer is no such easy task, that every stripling, every versifier'—he was going on, when my wife called to dinner; 'Sir,' said I, 'will you please eat a piece of beef with me?' 'Mr. Lintot,' said he, 'I am sorry you should be at the expense of this great book; I am really concerned on your account.' 'Sir, I am obliged to you; if you can dine upon a piece of beef, together with a slice of pudding—' 'Mr. Lintot, I do not say but Mr. Pope, if he would condescend to advise with men of learning—' 'Sir, the pudding is upon the Table, if you please to go in.' My critic complies, he comes to a taste of your poetry, and tells me in the same breath, that the book is commendable, and the pudding excellent." . . .

HOUSE OF COMMONS PROCEDURE.

'House of Commons Procedure: with Notes on American Practice,' is the title of a pamphlet by Mr. George Walpole, recently published by Mr. George Barber. Although intended chiefly for the assistance of Members in discussing the Procedure Resolutions, which it is expected the Government will introduce in this coming Session, there is matter in this little work which is of general interest, e.g.—

ORIGIN OF THE TERM 'WHIP.'

'This has been traced to a sally of Burke's in 1768, during the trouble over the election of Wilkes. Ministers sent messengers to bring back their supporters from the North of England, and even from France. Burke compared an official thus sent to the "whipper-in" of a pack of foxhounds.'

When Francis Bacon was a Member of Parliament, the National Hen began sitting at six o'clock in the morning; this was early in the sixteen hundreds.

TRADE CHANGES &c.

Messrs. R. J. Stark & Co., of Dunedin, N.Z., have recently purchased the stock and goodwill of the business hitherto carried on by Mr. J. G. Sawell.

BACON—SHAKESPEARE.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—This bi-literal cipher is found in the italic letters that appear in such unusual and unexplained prodigality in the original editions of Bacon's works. . . . There has been no reasonable explanation of this until now it is found that they were so used for the purposes of this cipher.' The above statement in Mrs. Gallup's work having attracted my attention, I have examined the following works taken haphazardly, and find that they all not only contain a large amount of italic letters, but also of two fonts:—

'History of Don Quixote,' translated by Thomas Shelton, 1620.

'The Rogue, or the Life of Guzman de Alfarache,' translated by James Mabbe, 1623.

'Arcadia,' by Sir Philip Sidney. Third edition. 1598.

'Poly-Olbion,' by Michael Drayton, 1622.

Is the Bacon cipher hid in all these?

Mrs. Gallup states that there are four works which she has not had an opportunity of deciphering. One of them is 'The Jew of Malta,' by Marlowe, which she says should precede 'The Merry Wives of Windsor.' Now, although the play was acted it is believed at the end of the sixteenth century, the first edition was not printed until 1633, nine years after Bacon's death.

ADVERTISING FOR PAGES OUT OF BOOKS.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—With reference to your remarks at the foot of my letter which you have kindly inserted in your No. of the 11th inst., may I point out that you seem to have somewhat misunderstood me?

I think it is quite permissible to advertise for imperfect books, and also, if desired, to state that they must contain certain specified pages; but I do think that to insert advertisements, not for imperfect books, but for single pages only is a great and direct encouragement to the mutilation of books in public libraries and elsewhere. This is a practice which it is almost impossible to detect at the time, and the best means to stop it is to afford no encouragement for the disposal of the stolen pages. You cannot imagine that anybody would cut up his (or her) own books—at any rate, Sir, if you can I cannot.

Yours very faithfully.

'X. R. X.'

[If 'X. R. X.' is right in supposing that advertising for single leaves out of a book is a direct incentive to the mutilation of books in public libraries we hope single leaves will not be advertised for.—ED. P.C.]

CHARLES HERBERT TESTIMONIAL FUND.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—May we venture to bring to your notice the sad case of Mr. Charles Herbert, who has been known for many years to most of the London and many of the country bookselling trade, having been in the business over forty years (recently at No. 333 Goswell Road, E.C.), and who has now become entirely incapacitated from work, owing to chronic gastritis, gastric neuralgia, and vertigo, added to a rapid development of gouty contraction of the fingers of both hands, making manual labour impossible.

All who have been brought into contact with him will testify to his persevering industry, his honesty and uprightness of character, and will sympathise with him in his present state of health, for which there appears to be no possible hope of recovery. In giving up his business, he is unfortunately left with very scanty means, quite inadequate to supply the bare necessities of existence, and it has therefore been suggested that an appeal to his more fortunate fellow-workers in the trade should be made, with the view of providing him with a small annual income in his declining years.

The cruel illness that has laid him aside makes a very suitable opportunity for his friends to show him in a substantial form the high regard they have for him.

We append a few names of those who have kindly promised to assist, and shall be glad to add yours to them.

MESSRS. DE LA RUE & CO.'S DIARIES FOR 1902.

In spite of competitors on all sides, Messrs. De la Rue & Co. more than hold their own for excellence in quality and design of all kinds of pocket, desk, and other Diaries, Engagement Books, &c. If we may offer a suggestion, it is that in future years they should give on the page following the title-page of their Indelible Diaries, edited by Mr. Ed. Roberts, F.R.A.S., a double column Table of Contents. Mr. Roberts gives most useful information, but one is apt to overlook the Table of Contents at the back of the work. For the office, library, or boudoir table nothing could be neater than the date cards in leather frames of different sizes made by the celebrated manufacturers of playing cards and high-class stationery of all kinds.

THE LATE MR. B. POPE.

We are glad to learn that the appeal on behalf of the family of the late Mr. Pope has the hearty support of the several firms with whom he was associated in the later years of his life, namely, Messrs. Whittaker & Co., Messrs. Dulau & Co., and Messrs. Crosby Lockwood & Son, who, anticipating the subscription movement announced in our columns last week, subscribed among themselves a sum amounting (with two or three smaller gifts) to nearly £90, forming a fund which is being administered for the benefit of the members of Mr. Pope's family. We think it only just to the firms mentioned above that this should be stated, and it is additional evidence of the esteem in which Mr. Pope was held.

OBITUARY.

MR. RICHARD HARRIS.

It is with regret that we have to announce the death of Mr. Richard Harris, bookseller, of Northampton, which occurred at his residence, 16 York Parade, Northampton, on Saturday evening, January 11. Deceased, who was in his eighty-third year, was a native of Northampton, and much respected. For some years past he had been in failing health, and had thus been prevented from taking an active part in the business carried on by him for so many years at the top of Bridge Street. His place in the management was taken by his son, Mr. W. I. Harris. He leaves five children (two sons and three daughters), one of his sons, the Rev. R. H. Harris, being Rector of Longton, Staffordshire. In his early life Mr. Harris was engaged in the shop of Mr. Boteler, now occupied by Mr. F. Hollis, at the corner of the Parade and Sheep Street. He afterwards entered the service of Mr. Walesby, at the top of Bridge Street, from whom, over fifty years since, he purchased the business. Deceased was a strong Churchman, and for about half a century was a teacher at All Saints' Sunday school. He acted as assistant superintendent at the school for over forty years, but owing to infirmity gave up his position some years since. In the eighties he was a licensed lay reader at the church. In the time of the existence of the Religious and Useful Knowledge Society in Gold Street, Mr. Harris was a strong supporter of the institution, and he was also formerly a member of the Northampton Friendly Society, founded a number of years since by the late Chancellor Wales.

MR. J. G. STUTTER.

We regret to learn from Mr. Geo. W. Rose, of Trowbridge, of the death of Mr. J. G. Stutter, which took place on the 13th inst. at his residence, 4 Avonfield Terrace, Bradford-on-Avon. Mr. Stutter, who was in his sixty-seventh year, had been 'on the road' for forty years, the last thirty-five being spent in the service of Messrs. George Routledge & Son, Ltd. His many friends throughout the country will be sorry to learn that he was taken ill in Glasgow when on his spring journey last May, suffering from a weak heart, the result of sheer hard work. Since then he has gradually got weaker, and, dropsy setting in, he passed away quietly on Monday last. He will be greatly missed by a wide circle of personal friends.

MR. CARL CLAUSEN, OF TURIN.

This well-known bookseller died after a very short illness at the age of sixty-two, on Jan. 5, 1902. His memory will long live in the literary and scientific world, and also in the memory of his colleagues who have had the good fortune to come in contact with him in business.

A LIST OF MAPS OF AMERICA IN THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS, PRECEDED BY A BIBLIOGRAPHY OF

(GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE, WASHINGTON.)

This publication constitutes a subject-chronological monograph relating to the maps of America in the Library of Congress. Many maps of rare interest are buried in books and atlases, and difficult to find when most wanted. They are often torn from their original places, their history becomes a question of doubt, and they are sold at a greater price than the atlas in which they were originally found. These the editor, Mr. Lee Phillips, has endeavoured to identify. The manuscript maps of the Revolutionary War contained in the Faden, Force, and Rochambeau collections, many of them unknown to the historian, are in the library and are noted in the work.

The maps in atlases are each separately catalogued. A large number of old State and county maps and plans of cities are fully described.

Mr. P. Lee Phillips, Chief of Division of Maps and Charts of the Library of Congress, is to be congratulated on the way he has done his work of over eleven hundred royal 8vo. pages.

HOW A 'PAR' TRAVELS ABOUT.

In the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR for Sept. 7, we gave a translation of a little note, 'How to tell Hand-made Paper from Machine-made Paper,' giving the Mémorial de la Librairie Française as authority for the statement. Our note appears to have been copied by the Stationery Trades Journal without acknowledgment—anyway we find it in the New York Publishers' Weekly credited to the S.T.J. We always endeavour to acknowledge the source of information taken from other journals, and think it is a rule which should be generally observed.

A NEW 'KRIEGSPIEL' WANTED.

A correspondent suggests that the latest effusion of Mr. Kipling has been misunderstood, and that all he means to suggest is that cricket and football are out of date as a preparation for warfare. Now that war is so much changed in its methods, we require a new war-game. Then why not encourage hide and seek as a useful training for Boer-finding; and hunt the slipper as a preliminary to the pursuit of the slippery De Wet?

New and Forthcoming Educational Works.

A new Manual for Cookery Classes and Domestic Use. 'King Edward's Cookery Book,' by Florence A. George, First-Class Diploma National Training School of Cookery, London; Mistress of Cookery at King Edward's High School for Girls, Birmingham. 'I have been induced to write this book because, from my experience as mistress of cookery in King Edward's High School for Girls, Birmingham, I have felt the great need of a suitable text-book. My aim has been to write a clear, concise, and methodical manual, which will contain everything that the ordinary Englishwoman of the middle class need know about cookery. It has a wide range, inasmuch as it includes artisan, household, and a little high-class cookery, so that I believe the book will be as useful to those who have £200 a year at their disposal as to those who have £1,000.'—Extract from Preface.

Messrs. GEORGE BELL & SONS.

'History of the City of Rome in the Middle Ages,' by Ferdinand Gregorovius, translated by Mrs. Hamilton, Vol. VIII. (completing the work). 'The Plays of Aristophanes,' the Greek text and a metrical translation on opposite pages, with notes and introduction by Benjamin Bickley Rogers, M.A., late Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford; first two vols.: 'The Frogs'; 'The Ecclesiazusæ.'

Messrs. A. & C. BLACK.

'Elementary Geography Readers,' by L. W. Lyde, M.A., illustrated: Scotland, Ireland, and Europe; British Isles; British Empire; Africa.—'The New Descriptive Geographies,' edited by A. J. Herbertson, Ph.D., and F. D. Herbertson, B.A., authors of 'Man and his Work,' illustrated: Central and South America; Africa. The 'Descriptive Geographies' are a series of geographical anthologies, designed to form descriptive reading books, based on the original narratives of the leading travellers and authorities. 'The Synthetical Maps,' by W. R. Taylor: Scotland, in five triple sections; Ireland, in four triple sections. These maps are the outcome of fifteen years' experience in the teaching of geography to pupils of all ages, both in day schools and evening continuation classes, and are designed to supplement oral teaching. 'First Course of Essay Writing,' by J. H. Fowler, M.A., Assistant Master at Clifton College, editor of 'Nineteenth Century Prose.'—'Lord Macaulay's Life of Pitt,' edited with introduction and notes by John Downie, M.A.—'English History Illustrated from Original Sources,' edited by George Townsend Warner, M.A., sometime Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge, Assistant Master in Harrow School, author of 'Landmarks in English Industrial History,' illustrated: 1660-1715, Rev. J. N. Figgis; 1399-1485, F. H. Durham. The Historical Series now projected will depict, in a number of volumes, the main features of each period of our history in interesting extracts drawn from contemporary writers of recognised authority on the subjects of which they treat. In addition there will be a number of illustrations of real educational value.—'History in Biography,' edited by B. A. Lees, Tutor in History, Somerville College, Oxford, late Historical Lecturer, Ladies' College, Cheltenham, with illustrations: I. 'Alfred to Edward II.,' by B. A. Lees; II. 'Edward II. to Henry VII.,' by A. M. Greenwood, Headmistress of the Withington Girls' School, Manchester, author of 'Empire and Papacy'; III. 'The Tudors,' by F. M. West, Sandecotes School, Parkstone, Dorset; IV. 'The Stuarts,' by H. Powell, Headmistress of the Leeds High School for Girls.—'Famous Englishmen,' Vol. II., James I. to Edward VII., an Historical Reader for Middle Divisions in Elementary Schools, by John Finnemore, author of 'Boys and Girls of other Days,' with fifty-seven illustrations. 'Famous Englishmen' consists of two volumes of simply-written lives, the first volume containing biographies from Alfred to Elizabeth, the second volume coming to the present day.—'Men of Renown: King Alfred to Lord Roberts,' an Historical Reader for Middle Divisions in Elementary Schools, by John Finnemore, with numerous illustrations.—'Social Life in England': Vol. I., From Saxon Times to 1605; Vol. II., From 1605 to the Present Day, by John Finnemore, author of 'Famous Englishmen' &c., each volume amply illustrated from contemporary pictures, prints, &c. This Historical Reader pays little or no attention to the matters which form the staple of most histories—the doings of kings, queens, statesmen, the making of treaties, the fighting of battles. Its aim is to give a picture of the life of the people at different periods. —School edition of 'Waverley,' unabridged, edited by E. E. Smith, with an index and special introduction and notes, also containing frontispiece and map; 'Waverley Continuous Reader,' abridged, edited by E. E. Smith, with introduction and notes, and containing map and 16 illustrations. School Shakespeare: 'Henry IV.,' edited by H. W. Ord, M.A., Blackheath School; 'Macbeth,' edited by L. W. Lyde, M.A., Bolton Grammar School. 'France de Montorel, Roman de la Guerre de Cent Ans,' par Jules de Glouvet, edited, with oral exercises, vocabulary, and illustrations, by F. B. Kirkman. An adaptation of M. de Glouvet's historical novel 'La France' (1418-29), it gives an account of the exciting adventures of a patriotic young Frenchman during the period preceding the advent of Joan of Arc. It is based on contemporary chronicles and introduces many historical characters. 'Les Aventures de Chicot,' par Alexandre Dumas, edited by A. R. Florian, Assistant-Master at the Manchester Grammar School, illustrated. The story of the famous French jester here given is taken from Dumas's 'Les Quarante-Cinq.' A few head-notes and foot-notes (in French) serve to place the text in its historical setting. 'Grands Prosateurs du XVII^e Siècle,' edited by Louis Brandin, Lic.-ès-Lettres (Paris), Archiviste-paléographe, Élève diplômé de l'École des Hautes Études, Ph.D. (Greifswald), Officier de l'Académie, Professor of French, Univ. Coll. London, illustrated. For use in upper forms, and contains the best prose specimens of the seventeenth century. The authors represented are Descartes, Pascal, Bossuet, Fénelon, and La Bruyère. 'The Old Senate and the New Monarchy, 60 B.C. to A.D. 14,' by F. M. Ormiston, Girls' High School, Leeds, illustrated. This is the third volume in the series ('The Conquest of Italy' and 'The Foreign Empire' are the other two). It is the most advanced of the three, being equal in difficulty to an average chapter of Caesar. The aim of the series is to make the construing lesson intelligent from the first, and to induce the pupil to think of words not as merely representing other words, but as conveying facts. Elementary Latin: 'Puerorum Liber Aureus,' a First Latin Translation Book, by T. S. Foster, B.A., being a narrative in simple Latin sentences of the life, friends, and correspondence of a Roman boy living in Etruria during the Principate of Claudius, and containing an account of Gauls, Germans, and Britons adapted from Caesar's Commentaries, and a description of Claudius's invasion of Britain and triumph at Rome: with maps and illustrations.

Messrs. BLACKIE & SONS, LTD.

New volumes in Blackie's Illustrated Latin Series:—Terence's 'Phormio,' edited by W. Cecil Laming, M.A. This edition of the 'Phormio' is distinguished by the same scholarly merits as Mr. Laming's edition of Livy. Virgil's 'Aeneid,' Book I., edited by H. B. Cotterill, M.A. Mr. Cotterill's edition of 'Aeneid,' Book VI., has been received with exceptional favour by scholars. This edition of Book I. is on the same lines, and contains eight full-page plates representing ancient works of art. Virgil's 'Georgics,' Book IV., edited by S. E. Winbolt, M.A. Caesar, 'Gallic War,' Books I.-VI., edited by Professor John Brown, M.A.; Book VII. to follow. This is a revised, re-set, and more fully illustrated edition of Professor Brown's well-known Caesar, of which many thousands of copies have been sold.

Blackie's Illustrated Greek Series. General editor, Professor Tyrrell, Litt.D.:—Messrs. Blackie & Son have the pleasure to announce a new series under the above title, edited by Professor Tyrrell, on the same general lines as the Illustrated Latin Series. The first volumes will be: Aeschylus, 'Eumenides,' edited by Lionel D. Barnett, M.A., Litt.D.; Homer's 'Odyssey,' Book I., edited by the Rev. E. C. Everard Owen, M.A.; Xenophon, 'Anabasis,' II., edited by the Rev. G. H. Nall, M.A. 'A First Latin Course,' by E. H. Scott, B.A., and Frank Jones, B.A. This book is based on conversation throughout. 'The Latin Period, an Elementary Exercise Book,' by E. A. Wells, M.A. A Key to Professor Flamstead Walters's 'First Steps in Continuous Latin Prose' has just been issued, and will be supplied post-free to teachers only.

'Blackie's Little French Classics':—Messrs. Blackie & Son are much gratified by the welcome this new series has received. Its aim is to provide students of French literature with well-printed selections over a wide range in a cheap and handy form. 'Selections from Rabelais,' edited by E. C. Goldberg, M.A.; Molière Scenes from 'Le Médecin malgré lui,' edited by W. J. Clark, M.A., Ph.D.; Lesage Selections from 'Gil Blas,' edited by H. W. Atkinson, M.A.; Prosper Mérimée, 'Mateo Falcone,' &c., edited by J. E. Michell, M.A.; Madame de Sévigné, 'Select Letters,' edited by Miss M. F. Vernon Harcourt; Bossuet 'Oraisons funèbres,' edited by the Rev. H. J. Chaytor, M.A. French:—'A Notebook of French Literature,' by Philip C. Yorke, M.A., Magdalen College, Oxford. In two volumes. Vol. I. To the end of the 18th Century; Xavier de Maistre, 'La Jeune Sibérienne,' edited by W. G. Etheridge, M.A., Assistant Master at Westminster School, with vocabulary; 'The Picture French Primers,' by Marguerite Ninet, French Mistress in the Church of England High School for Girls, Eaton Square, S.W.; 'First French Primer,' consisting of 127 small illustrations, with simple letterpress and vocabulary; 'Second French Primer,' consisting of 32 larger illustrations, with simple descriptive sentences and vocabulary; 'My First French Book,' a picture reading book, printed in large type, containing 36 stories and sketches with vocabularies, 44 illustrations, and exercises for retranslation. French History:—'A Brief Sketch of French History, 1789-1815,' by Léony Guilgault; 'A Brief Sketch of French History, 1815-1873,' by Henry Hirsch, B.A. German:—'First Steps in German,' by W. Scholle, Ph.D., and George Smith, M.A. This book is based throughout on the New Method. The lessons are conversational, and are intended to be used with Hölzel's pictures, which are given in the book. An interesting section consists of German songs with music, the authors rightly holding that these facilitate and lend interest to the acquirement of German pronunciation. 'A First German Book,' by Miss L. A. Lowe, with many illustrations; 'German Unseens,' for Middle and Upper Forms, selected by W. G. Etheridge, M.A. Specimens of modern German prose.

'Blackie's Little German Classics':—Messrs. Blackie & Son have the pleasure to announce a new series under the above title, uniform in aim and general appearance with the 'Little French Classics'; 'Kotzebue, 'Der gerade Weg der beste,' a short play, edited by the Rev. J. H. D. Matthews, M.A.; 'The Nibelungenlied,' selections, modernised, edited by H. B. Cotterill, M.A.; Körner, 'Select Ballads,' edited by E. P. Ash, M.A.; Schiller, 'Select Ballads,' edited by Mrs. Weekley.

'The Warwick Library of English Literature.' General editor, Professor C. H. Herford, Litt.D. Each volume deals with the development in English literature of some special literary form, is illustrated by a series of representative specimens, slightly annotated, and preceded by a critical analytical introduction. New volume, 'English Tales in Verse,' with an introduction by C. H. Herford, M.A., Litt.D.; Milton's

'Lycidas,' edited by H. B. Cotterill, M.A.; 'Much Ado about Nothing' (Warwick Shakespeare), edited by J. C. Smith, M.A.; 'Richard the Third' (Junior School Shakespeare), edited by F. E. Webb, M.A.; Macaulay's 'Lives of Johnson and Goldsmith,' edited by John Downie, M.A. (Blackie's English Classics). This is an edition of the lives written by Macaulay for the 'Encyclopædia Britannica.' 'Browning's Strafford,' edited by Miss Agnes Wilson (Blackie's English Classics). 'The Picture Shakespeare.' Under this title Messrs. Blackie & Son are issuing an illustrated edition of Shakespeare's Plays in single volumes suitable mainly for schools and the home circle. Blackie's 'Continental Geography Readers,' a series of five books dealing with the five great Continents individually. Each book is provided with an up-to-date synopsis of the geography, illustrated with numerous coloured maps. The reading lessons are plentifully illustrated with sketch maps. 'Brush-Drawing,' a handbook for teachers and students, by J. W. Nicol, containing 66 plates coloured with carefully graduated models for young beginners; 'Physics and Chemistry,' by W. Jerome Harrison, F.G.S., a Course of Science Lessons in twenty-four chapters, with numerous illustrations and diagrams; 'Cookery and Laundry Work,' Practical Lessons and Lectures, with simple lectures on Hygiene and Housewifery, by L. C. Andrews, First Class Diplômée, Dublin School of Cookery, with numerous recipes and cost of each. New books by G. A. Henty: 'With Roberts to Pretoria,' a tale of the South African War. Last year Mr. Henty told the story of the relief of Ladysmith; this season he takes up the record of the operations in the West. 'At the Point of the Bayonet,' a tale of the Mahratta War; 'To Herat and Cabul,' a story of the first Afghan War.

Ashley; 'The Training of Teachers and Methods of Instruction,' selected papers by S. S. Laurie, M.A., LL.D., Professor of the Institutes and History of Education in the University of Edinburgh.

Messrs. CASSELL & CO., Ltd.

Conspicuous among the recent educational publications of Messrs. Cassell & Co. are the concluding four volumes of the 'Eyes and No Eyes Series of Nature Study' readers, which, with the two volumes already published, form an admirable vade mecum to such of the secrets of Dame Nature as are likely to attract and interest young children. As in the two preceding volumes of the series, the coloured illustrations, carefully and specially drawn from nature by Mr. Muckley, are a special feature which has received much commendation from inspectors, managers and teachers. The aim of the series is to interest children in the sights and sounds of rural life. The four volumes to which we have specially referred are as follows: Book III., 'Plant Life in Field and Garden'; Book IV., 'Birds of the Air'; Book V., 'Trees and Shrubs'; Book VI., 'Insect Life.' Another publication that has been issued within the last few days is an annotated edition of Stevenson's powerful study of fraternal hatred and rivalry—the 'Master of Ballantrae.' For the notes and glossary Mr. T. Cartwright, B.A., B.Sc., is responsible, and although primarily issued to suit the requirements of candidates for the King's Scholarship Examination, it is believed that the book will be welcomed by many lovers of Stevenson, whose knowledge of the classics does not suffice to make clear to them the many classical references to be found in this gloomy yet magnificent portraiture of the passions. Messrs. Cassell & Co. have also been called upon to reprint Mr. H. O. Arnold Forster's popular 'History of England,' which is rapidly becoming one of the most widely read treatises on History, judging not only from the circulation but also from the letters that have from time to time been sent by students and teachers who have found the book helpful to them in their work. 'Things New and Old,' by the same author, is another series of school books that have been reprinted again and again, so that nearly 200,000 copies have already been issued. We have also received a list of books suitable for pupil teachers that have just been issued; it includes 'First Lessons in German Reading,' by A. Jägot, which gives an interlinear translation section, followed by an admirable selection of poetical and prose extracts, to the whole of which is appended a lucid vocabulary; 'French Lessons in French,' by Professor Champtassin, of the Chelsea Polytechnic, which is a guide to the teaching of French on the newest lines, viz. by means of the French language itself with only the minimum employment of English. A cheap edition of Mr. W. E. Sparkes's 'Blackboard Drawing,' which is approved by the Board of Education, has just been published, with a special note on the use of tempera; Professor Postgate's 'Latin Primers,' and the four well-known Dictionaries of the English, French, German and Latin languages. A cheap edition of the 'Century Science Series' also merits mention as being a set of books of very great interest to students of science and to the curious public who would fain know something of the great scientific pioneers, mainly of English blood. The set includes 'John Dalton and the Rise of Modern Chemistry,' by the editor of the series, Sir Henry Roscoe, F.R.S.; 'Charles Darwin and the Theory of Natural Selection,' by Prof. Poulton, F.R.S.; 'Humphrey Davy, Poet and Philosopher,' by Prof. Thorpe, LL.D., F.R.S.; 'Michael Faraday,' by Prof. Thompson, F.R.S.; 'T. Herschell and Modern Astronomy,' by Agnes M. Clarke; 'Justus von Liebig,' by W. A. Shenstone, F.I.C.; 'Charles Lyell and Modern Geology,' by Prof. Bonney, F.R.S.; 'J. Clerk Maxwell and Modern Physics,' by Prof. Glazebrook, F.R.S.; 'Pasteur,' by Percy Frankland, B.Sc.; 'Major Rennell and the Rise of English Geography,' by Sir C. R. Markham, C.B., F.R.S.

Mr. W. B. CLIVE.

The Organised Science Series: Books in preparation for South Kensington (Board of Education) Examinations: 'First Stage Practical Plane and Solid Geometry,' by G. F. Burn, A.M.Inst.M.E. (Medallist in Practical Plane and Solid Geometry). This book is the outcome of many years' experience in teaching day and evening classes. 'First Stage Machine Construction and Drawing,' by J. H. Dales, A.M.Inst.C.E. This volume will deal with mechanical drawing as a practical art in its relation to engineering and constructional work.—'Mathematics, First Stage,' edited by William Briggs, LL.D., M.A., F.C.S., F.R.A.S. This book will contain all the Euclid and algebra required for the First Stage Examination in Mathematics [of the South Kensington Board of Education.—'Physiology, First Stage; Section 1, Physiology.'—'Hygiene, Advanced,' by A. E. Ikin, B.Sc., and R. A. Lyster, B.Sc. 'Advanced Hygiene' will be written on the same lines as 'Stage I. Hygiene,' and the subject-matter will follow the same order as far as possible. The book is intended to provide a complete course for second-year students in hygiene.—'First Stage Applied Mechanics,' 'First Stage Organic Chemistry (Theoretical),' by R. A. Lyster, B.Sc.; 'First Stage Mining,' 'First Stage Steam,' 'Section I. Hygiene,' by R. A. Lyster, B.Sc.

The University Tutorial Series: 'The Tutorial Arithmetic,' by W. P. Workman, M.A., Headmaster of Kingswood School, Bath. This will be found a complete treatment of the subject suitable not only for comparative beginners but also for advanced students. Especial stress will be laid upon theory, as also upon the mechanical exercises necessary to make the learner an expert and rapid calculator. Chapters will be included on certain subjects lying in the borderland between arithmetic and algebra which have as yet received but scant attention in English books, such as the 'Theory of Circulating Decimals' and the 'Elements of the Theory of Numbers.'—'Euclid,' Books V., VI., and XI., by Rupert Deakin, M.A. Oxon., Headmaster of Stourbridge Grammar School.

The University Tutorial Press has in preparation an edition of the 'Euthyphro' and 'Menexenus,' of Plato, by Mr. T. R. Mills, Lecturer in Latin at University College, Dundee. This will contain Introduction and Notes, and there will be also a special issue with Vocabulary and Translation for the use of private students preparing for the London University Intermediate Arts Examination of 1903. At the same press there will shortly appear the first separate edition, with English notes, of Tacitus, 'Histories,' Book III., also intended for candidates for the London Intermediate Examination of next year; also an edition of Vergil, 'Georgics,' Books I. and IV., for the same examination. It is expected that the above will be ready in February and March next. 'The Tutorial History of Greece,' by W. J. Woodhouse, M.A., Professor of Greek in the University of Sydney, and late Craven Fellow in the University of Oxford. This book is intended primarily for those who are studying in outline the history of Greece down to the death of Alexander, for examinations such as the London University Intermediate Arts and B.A. It will also be found useful in schools where Greek History is offered for the Locals or the Oxford and Cambridge Board Examination. 'A Higher Latin Grammar,' by F. G. Plaistowe, M.A. Camb. and Lond., Gold Medalist in Classics, late Fellow of Queens' College, Cambridge. Suitable for the upper forms in schools, and for candidates for pass degrees. It has been considered advisable, for the sake of completeness, to include in this work a digest of elementary matter not usually found in advanced books on the subject. 'Higher Latin Composition,' by A. H. Allcroft. An introduction to continuous prose composition. 'A Higher Greek Grammar,' intended for London University Intermediate Arts Examination, and other University Pass Degrees. It should prove a serviceable book for the upper forms in schools. 'The Tutorial Greek Course.' This book is intended to bring the beginner up to the standard required for reading an easy Greek Classic, and will be found suitable for candidates preparing for London Matriculation and the University Locals. The Tutorial History of England, by C. S. Fearenside, M.A. Oxon. This book consists of the author's 'Matriculation History of England' (to 1702), continued to the end of the reign of Queen Victoria. 'The Preceptors English Grammar,' by W. H. Low, M.A. Lond., and Arnold Wall, M.A. Lond., Professor of English in the University of New Zealand. 'The Intermediate Text-Book of English History,' Vol. 1, to 1485, by C. S. Fearenside, M.A. Oxon., and A. Johnson Evans, M.A. Camb., B.A. Lond.

DR. CORNWELL'S SCHOOL BOOKS.

So well known are the school books connected with Dr. Cornwell's name that it has long been a household word throughout the empire. It is very satisfactory to find that, in spite of the greatly increased competition, new editions of Dr. Cornwell's geographies, grammars, arithmetics, &c., are constantly being called for.

Messrs. DENT & CO.

Messrs. Dent have a number of new Educational Works in preparation for early publication, but regret they can only, at present, announce the following: Molière's 'Le Misanthrope' (Volume 3 of Dent's 'School Molière') edited, with preface and exhaustive notes, by Prof. Frederic Spencer (required for the Cambridge Local Examinations, December next).

Messrs. DUCKWORTH & CO.

'The Theatre: its Development in France and England, with the History of its Greek and Latin Origins,' by Charles Hastings, translated by F. A. Welby. A handbook to the study of the drama and a manual of dramatic history. The author aims at earning for this work the reputation of an original, useful, and practical text-book. He was lately Lecturer at University College, Bristol, and his scholastic experiences have shown him that students are too frequently ignorant of matters of dramatic literature. He therefore advocates the devotion of more time to the study of the drama in our educational centres.

For each of the following Examinations may be had free on application:

Messrs. HACHETTE & CO.

Brachet, 'The Public School French Grammar,' giving the latest Results of Modern Philology, new edition (ready shortly); 'French Grammars, Primers, Philology,' &c., Charlin, 'Grammaire Intuitive, pour l'étude simultanée de deux langues, à l'usage de tous les pays, 1st Part, English-French Text, German Text; 2nd Part, English-French Text, German Text; 3rd Part in preparation. 'A Complete French Verb Drill,' containing Tables of the Auxiliaries, Regular Conjugations, and Irregular Verbs, arranged in alphabetical order and followed by copious exercises, by Jules Lazare, B. ès L., and Herbert Marshall, M.A., late Assistant Master at the Isle of Wight College, Ryde (ready shortly). French verbs cannot be mastered merely by glancing over a table of conjugations. Unless their systematic study be undertaken at an early stage, they remain a stumbling-block in the path of the student and a constant source of discouragement. Unfortunately this essential subject is treated too scantily in most grammars, where, in obedience to a time-honoured custom, much valuable space is devoted to far less important matters. The present compilation is an attempt to remedy this deficiency.

'Ulrich's French Course for Army and Navy Candidates,' by Anton J. Ulrich, Assistant Master at Bradfield College. This book may be used also for London Matriculation, Oxford and Cambridge Locals, and other examinations. Ulrich's Key to the 'French Course for Army and Navy Candidates'; 'French Composition and Conversation,' new and revised edition, a Companion to all French Grammars, and a useful Manual for Candidates for Examinations, by E. T. Schoedel, B.A. (Oxon.). Part I. consists of simple conversations based upon the most important rules of French Syntax, intended to be repeated again and again until the forms of the sentences are impressed upon the pupil's memory. Part II. deals chiefly with the niceties of French Syntax—a solution of the difficulties of which will be found under carefully classified headings. Part III. has been added as a stepping-stone to the study of French idioms. 'Vade-Mecum of French Composition for Elementary and Intermediate Classes,' compiled and edited by Jules Lazare, B. ès L., and H. Marshall, M.A.; 'Elementary Lessons and Exercises in Colloquial French,' compiled and edited by H. d'A. Hoffmann and C. Tobie; Peschier, 'Causeries Parisiennes,' a new and entirely revised edition. 'Practical Conversations on topics of everyday interest such as occur in Parisian society,' compiled and edited by A. Peschier. 'Hachette's Elementary French Readers,' new volumes, printed in bold type and consisting of short instructive stories for the use of junior forms, with explanatory notes, French-English Vocabulary, &c. Vol. 16, Beissier, 'Mémoires d'un Moineau,' edited with notes and vocabulary, by H. Lallemand, B. ès L., B. ès Sc.; Vol. 17, Mme. la Comtesse de Ségur, 'Histoire de la Princesse Rosette, La Petite Souris Grise,' edited by J. Maurice Rey, B. ès L. A new series of Short Masterpieces of French Prose, General editor, Charles Sarolea, D.Ph., D.Litt.: Vol. I., Hégésippe Moreau, 'Contes à ma Sœur.' The object of this new series is to provide a selection of the best and most attractive literature at a very moderate price—to enlarge, in fact, the range of our scholastic French literature. French Readers in Prose and Verse (new volumes): 'Premières Lectures en Prose et en Vers,' a new French Reader for elementary and intermediate classes, by Jules Lazare, B. ès L.; 'Petits Chefs-d'Œuvre contemporains,' six short and attractive tales in prose, by E. Arène, J. Claretie, F. Coppée, G. de Maupassant, J. Richepin, and A. Theuriot, edited, with notes, vocabulary, &c., by Jules Lazare, B. ès L.

'The Intermediate English Grammar, for the use of Schools and Colleges, and for Candidates preparing for the University Locals, the Preliminary Examinations in Medicine &c., and for the use of Pupil Teachers,' by Charles Hart, B.A., English Master at St. Cuthbert's Grammar School, Newcastle-on-Tyne. 'A remarkably well-arranged text-book, covering all the ground that a grammar-school boy of sixteen or seventeen may reasonably be expected to traverse.'—Guardian. 'Will prove a boon to pupil teachers preparing for the King's Scholarship Examination, and for boys and girls preparing for the "Locals" or other examinations.'—Teachers' Aid. 'Hugo d'Alési's Geographical Wall Pictures, for Colleges, Elementary Schools, and Kindergarten,' published under the patronage of the French Ministry of Public Instruction, and adopted by leading French Government Schools and other scholastic establishments. 'Hölzel's Unrivalled Conversational Wall Pictures, for Colleges, Elementary Schools, and Kindergarten.' New issues:—Series IV. (Indoor Occupations). XIII. The Dwelling. View of interior, depicting a sitting and dining-room, numerous articles of furniture, dining-table laid, children, their toys, &c. Through the open door at the side can be seen the kitchen, with cooking stove and domestic utensils. XIV. A Sea-port and Harbour. XV. Building of a House. XVI. Interior of a Mine.

Messrs. W. HEFFER & SONS, Cambridge.

'Certificate Note-Book of European History, 1814-1848,' a course of study containing 32 typical questions arranged in the form of eight one-hour test papers, with full answers, hints, and references; also brief survey of the period, hints on answering questions in history, suggestive notes and queries on teaching history, select list of books useful to the teacher and learner, notable topics and sayings of the period, short biographies and a vocabulary by J. S. Lindsey.

Mr. FRANCIS HODGSON.

The 'Hamiltonian System,' or a short and easy method of learning a foreign language by a close interlinear translation. Reduced in price: Caesar's 'Gallic War,' Book 1; 'Eutropius,' 'Florian's Fables,' 'Perrin's Fables.'

Messrs. LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.

'The Principles of English Constitutional History,' by Lucy Dale, late Scholar of Somerville College, Oxford. 'Thoughts on Education,' Essays and Addresses, by Mandell Creighton, D.D., sometime Bishop of London. 'Pastor Agnorum: a Schoolmaster's Afterthoughts,' by John Huntley Skrine, Warden of Glenalmond, author of 'A Memory of Edward Thring,' &c. 'Notes of Lessons on the Herbartian Method' (based on Herbart's Plan), by Members of the Staff at the Ursuline High School, Wimbledon, with a Preface by M. Fennell, Lecturer on Education. Other educational announcements of Messrs. Longmans will be given later on.

Messrs. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., Limited.

'Woodwork for Schools,' by F. F. Lydon, Art Master of Parmiter's School, Victoria Park, will be issued shortly; it forms a two years' course to meet the new requirements for the training colleges for men, or a three years' course for schools; it will contain forty-five plates and fifty-six diagrams and illustrations of tools. 'Geometrical Drawing for Schools,' by the same author, makes special features of Pattern Drawing, Drawing to Scale, and Solid Geometry and Sections; in these latter the illustrative diagrams make clear what is usually the most difficult branch of the subject; this book fully covers the syllabus for Geometrical Drawing for the 'D' Certificate. 'The Students' Chemistry,' by R. L. Taylor. Third edition enlarged and revised with the assistance of J. H. Wolfenden. This work is divided into two parts. The first is a concise statement of facts about the more important inorganic substances; in the second part physical facts and chemical theories are dealt with. 'The German Reader,' Parts I. and II., by Dr. Emil Otto. 'German Conversation-Grammar,' by Dr. Emil Otto. These three volumes are text-books of the Gaspey-Otto-Sauer method for the study of modern languages, which has of late years received considerable attention and attained great success. The first Reader contains a number of short readings suited to young pupils and beginners, such as anecdotes, fables, fairy tales. The second Reader rises to natural history, philosophy, geography, history, biography, &c.; selections from the best authors. Notes and vocabulary complete each Reader. A great advantage of the 'Conversation Grammar' is, as the name suggests, the combination of conversation with grammar in every lesson; while the great advantage of the system is that an acquaintance with the books for learning one language facilitates the learning of another. 'A Manual of Pushtu,' by Captain G. Roos-Keppel, President of Central Committee of Examiners in Pushtu Language; 'Napoleon's Campaign in Poland, 1806-1807,' by F. Loraine Petre. Fills a distinct gap in English military history, and generally to our knowledge of this campaign. The object of the writer has been, he informs us in his preface, to attract some attention to an episode in Napoleon's military career 'which seems hitherto to have been unduly neglected,' and it certainly will be through no shortcoming of the author if this object is not attained. 'Mineralogy Simplified,' by Henry Erni, A.M., M.D., and Amos P. Brown, E.M., Ph.D. Third edition. This book is an extension of Dr. Erni's original work on the simplifying of mineralogy. It is divided into three parts—the first deals with the theory and machinery for detecting the presence of the various elements, the second is an extensive list of mineral species, showing what chemical change may be produced in them under particular tests, while the third portion aims at showing the special physical properties which the same species possess. 'A Malay-English Dictionary,' by R. J. Wilkinson (Straits Settlements Civil Service). The aim of the author of this Malay-English Dictionary has been the preparation of a work as far as possible accurate and complete within certain definite limits prescribed for it. The present work confines itself to the Malay of literature and to the two great dialects: that of Riau and Johor, which is also spoken in Selangor, Pahang, and in Malacca, and that of Kedah, which is the colloquial of Penang and Province Wellesley as well. Incidentally, however, many local peculiarities are recorded, and many words which have crept into the patois of towns such as Singapore and Penang fall naturally within the scope of this work. The work is to be completed in two parts; the first part is now ready.

PITT PRESS SHAKESPEARE FOR SCHOOLS

SHAKESPEARE.—MACBETH. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Glossary, by A. W. VERITY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1s. 6d.

'Undoubtedly the best school edition extant of this particular play, and possibly the best that has ever been produced of any play of Shakespeare's. We will, moreover, go further, and add that it is a mine of wealth for all students of Shakespeare, whatever may be their object in studying him.'—GUARDIAN.

Subject for Cambridge Local Examinations, December 1902.

SHAKESPEARE.—A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. Edited by A. W. VERITY, M.A., Trinity College. Sixth Edition, with Additions and Corrections. 1s. 6d.

'For schoolboys of fourteen and upwards this edition is not to be beaten, and we can congratulate Mr. Verity and the University Press upon the publication of what will probably become the standard school edition of this play.'—GUARDIAN.

Subject for Oxford Local and College of Preceptors' Examinations, 1902.

JULIUS CÆSAR. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Glossary, and Index, by A. W. VERITY, M.A. Fifth Edition, with Additions and Corrections. 1s. 6d.
 'It is as good, and deserves as much praise, as its predecessors. As we said of them we may say of this book, that in both notes and introduction Mr. Verity displays sound scholarship and learning, while he never forgets that he is writing for boys.'—GUARDIAN.

Subject for Oxford and Cambridge Certificate Examinations, 1902.

KING LEAR. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Glossary, and Index, by A. W. VERITY, M.A. Second Edition. 1s. 6d.

COMPLETE EDUCATIONAL LISTS ON APPLICATION.

London: C. J. CLAY & SONS, Cambridge University Press Warehouse, Ave Maria Lane.

ners a bird's-eye view of Canada, the U.S., Central America, the West Indies, and South America, insisting rather on broad general features, climate, harbours, means of communication natural and artificial, than on names of places. Asia, illustrated. The aim of the compiler is to give a general view of a very large subject, and enable beginners to see things in their relation to each other instead of learning a part in mere detail. Macmillan's New History Readers on the Concentric Plan, Book I., Junior; Summary to Book I.; Book II., Intermediate; Summary to Book II.; Book III.; 'Macmillan's Scholar's Report Card and Register of Marks.' Extract from Revised Instructions to Inspector's applicable to Code of 1901: Instruction No. 8, p. 5: 'It may be useful that some short record of the conduct of each scholar should be sent to the parents annually. But such records should not hamper a teacher in varying the work of the school, nor be so detailed as to demand an undue amount of clerical work.' 'Junior Course of English Composition,' by J. C. Nesfield, M.A., Author of 'English Grammar Past and Present,' 'Manual of English Grammar and Composition,' &c. This book has been designed for use in the upper classes at Board Schools, and for students competing in the Oxford or Cambridge Local Examinations, for the examinations of Pupil Teachers. 'Oral Exercises in English Composition,' by J. C. Nesfield, M.A.; 'A Country Reader, for use in Village Schools,' by H. B. M. Buchanan, B.A., with illustrations. 'Macmillan's Facsimile Modern Business Forms for use in connection with the text-book entitled "Modern Business Methods: Import and Export Trade,"' by Fredk. Hooper, Secretary of the Bradford Chamber of Commerce, and James Graham, Inspector for Commercial Subjects and Modern Languages to the West Riding County Council: No. 1. The Home Trade; No. 2. Export Trade; No. 3. Imports and Ships. 'The Irish Teachers' Work Book; Syllabus of Instruction and Examination; Progress and Mark Book; arranged in accordance with the requirements of the Revised Programme of Instruction in the National Schools'; 'Lessons in Elementary Grammar,' by George A. Mirick, A.M., formerly supervising Principal of the Strong District, New Haven, Conn.; 'French Course, Second Year,' by A. C. Pouré, Principal of the Northern Institute of Languages, Leeds and Bradford; Introductory Physics for Irish Intermediate Schools: being a First Year's Course of Exercises in Practical Physics,' by R. A. Gregory, Professor of Astronomy, Queen's College, London, and A. T. Simmons, B.Sc. (Lond.), Associate of the Royal College of Science, London; 'Algebraical Examples supplementary to Hall and Knight's Algebra for Beginners and Elementary Algebra (Chaps. I.-XXVII),' by H. S. Hall, M.A., formerly Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge, with or without Answers. Hooper and Graham's Series: 'Modern Book-keeping and Accounts,' in 3 parts, by William Adgie, F.C.A.—Part I.: Elementary. Mr. Wm. Adgie has prepared for Messrs. Macmillan's series of Modern Manuals of Science a text-book on 'Modern Book-keeping and Accounts,' based on the writer's experience as a lecturer on the subject to training classes for teachers. The object of the book is primarily educational, but it is at the same time practical in character and adapted for the use of students actually engaged in business. The exercises are carefully graded, and each is of such length as will permit of its being completed in class. 'A Geography of Wales intended chiefly for use in Welsh Schools,' by A. E. L. Hudson, B.A. Oxon., formerly Scholar of Lincoln College, illustrated; 'Domestic Economy for Scholarship and Certificate Students,' by Ethel R. Lush, late Organising Mistress to the Ipswich School Board, Head Mistress of the Ipswich Higher Grade Girls' School, compiled to meet the requirements of students for the King's Scholarship Examination and the Certificate Examination of the Board of Education. The twenty-four chapters deal with hygiene in all its aspects, with household management, expenditure, and investment, and with infectious diseases and the treatment of the sick. Macmillan's Manuals for Teachers: New volume, 'Principles of Class Teaching,' by J. J. Findlay, M.A., Headmaster of the Cardiff Intermediate School for Boys; 'The Talisman,' by Sir Walter Scott, Bart., abridged edition for schools, with illustrations. An abridged edition of 'The Talisman' for use in schools. The introduction divides the personages of the story into historical and non-historical, and gives a brief historical note on each of the former, with a short account of the Crusades and the institution of chivalry. 'The King's Weigh House Lectures to Business Men,' by the Right Hon. Lord Avebury, F.R.S., C. A. Montague Barlow, LL.D., M.A., Sir Courtenay Boyle, K.C.B., Herbert E. Crabb, W. Evans, Colonel H. M. Hozier, C.B., A. J. Wilson, and T. McKinnon Wood, LL.D., D.L., J.P., with an introduction by M. E. Sadler, Christ Church, Oxford. Contents: Educational Equipment for Business. Short Statements by a few Leaders of Commerce—England's Need of Commercial Education—Money and Credit—Method and Organisation in Business—'Lloyd's'—The Companies Act 1900—Commercial Bankruptcy: The Ways into it and out of it—The Stock Exchange—The History of Money (Summarised)—Commerce and Citizenship; 'The Teacher's Manual of Composition,' by Robert S. Wood, Author of Macmillan's 'Word-Building and Composition,' Vol. I. Junior Course (for Infants and Standards I. and II.). 'The Teacher's Manual of Composition' advocates and explains the use of oral exercises in composition: that is, the teaching of children to speak correctly and coherently on a given subject. This process he thinks should precede written composition. The book consists largely of examples, showing how the object lessons (now universally recognised) may be applied to this purpose. 'The History of Europe in Outline, 1814-1848, from the Restoration of the Bourbons to the Fall of the Monarchy of July,' by Oscar Browning, M.A., Senior Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, and University Lecturer in History. The Board of Education having selected as the historical subject in 1902 for students in men's training colleges the History of Europe from 1814 to 1848. 'Experimental Hygiene: an Introductory Course of Work in the Principles of Domestic Science,' by A. T. Simmons, B.Sc. (Lond.), Associate of Royal College of Science, London, and E. Stenhouse, B.Sc. (Lond.), Associate of Royal College of Science, London. A work in elementary science designed for girl students. Experiments are fully illustrated by diagrams. 'Primer of Geometry, comprising the Subject-Matter of Euclid I.-IV., treated by the Methods of Pure Geometry,' by H. W. Croome Smith, B.A. This work treats the subject-matter of Euclid's first four books on principles in accord with modern mathematics—for instance, introducing the idea of revolution into the definition of angles and circles, and generally by making the sequence purely natural and logical. The 'Golden Treasury' series—new volumes: 'Marcus Aurelius Antoninus to Himself,' in English, by Gerald H. Rendall, M.A., Litt.D., Headmaster of Charterhouse; 'The House of Atreus, being the Agamemnon, Libation-Bearers, and Furies of Æschylus,' translated into English verse by E. D. A. Morshead, M.A. Mr. E. D. A. Morshead's well-known verse translation of Æschylus's trilogy, 'The House of Atreus,' has been added to the 'Golden Treasury' series, and will be published with the original preface and a subsequent note by the author. Elementary Classics—new volume: 'M. Tulli Ciceronis pro A. Licinio Archia Poeta Oratio ad Indices,' edited for the use of schools, with introduction, notes, and vocabulary by G. H. Nall, M.A., Assistant Master at Westminster School. 'An Elementary Treatise on the Calculus,' with illustrations from Geometry, Mechanics, and Physics, by George A. Gibson, M.A., F.R.S.E., Professor of Mathematics in the Glasgow and West of England Technical College. 'An Elementary Treatise on the Calculus,' which aims at preparing the student for immediately applying its principles and processes in any department of studies in which the Calculus is generally used; and to that end the subject is illustrated from Geometry, Mechanics, and Physics, though without detailed treatment of their particular difficulties. 'Practical Chemistry: an Experimental Introduction to Laboratory Practice and Qualitative Analysis from a Physicochemical Standpoint,' by R. Abegg and Professor W. Herz, Professor and Demonstrator of Analytical Chemistry at the University of Breslau, translated with the author's sanction by H. T. Calvert, B.Sc. (Vict.), A.I.C., with 3 tables; 'Spherical Trigonometry for the Use of Colleges and Schools,' by the late I. Todhunter, M.A., F.R.S., revised by J. G. Leathem, M.A., D.Sc., Fellow and Lecturer of St. John's College, Cambridge; 'Hygiene for Students,' by Edward F. Willoughby, M.D. Lond., Diploma in State Medicine of the London University and in Public Health of Cambridge University; 'A College Text-Book of Chemistry,' by Ira Remsen, President of Johns Hopkins University; 'Introduction to Chemistry and Physics,' by Professor W. H. Perkins, junr., Ph.D., F.R.S., and Bevan Lean, D.Sc., B.A. (Lond.), in 2 vols.; 'Light for Students,' by E. Edser, Author of 'Heat for Advanced Students'; 'Practical Botany for Beginners,' by Professor F. O. Bower, new edition; 'Les Histoires de Tante,' by R. D'Alissas (M. and K. Roget), with notes by the authors; 'Passages for Unseen Translation into Latin,' by Miss M. Alford. English Classics Series: 'Kenilworth,' 'Quentin Durward,' by Sir Walter Scott; 'Ivanhoe,' by Sir Walter Scott, abridged edition for schools. Siepmann's German Series: 'Hermann der Cherusker,' by Goebel, edited by J. Esser; 'Sophocles: the Antigone,' edited by Rev. M. A. Bayfield, M.A., Classical Series; 'Teacher's Manual of Object Lessons in Geography,' by V. T. Murché; 'Handbook for Teachers on Brush Drawing and Design,' by Charles Holland; 'Macmillan's Brush Design Drawing Cards,' sets 1, 2, and 3.

Mr. JOHN MURRAY.

Among Mr. Murray's New and Forthcoming Works are: The Teachers' Edition of 'Stanley's Life of Arnold,' with a Preface by Sir Joshua Fitch, LL.D., with Photogravure Portrait and sixteen half-tone illustrations. This work is set by the Board of Education for the Elementary Teachers' Certificate, 1902. Chapters I. to IX. of 'Hallam's Constitutional History of England,' bound together in one volume for the special use of candidates for the London University Examinations; 'A General History of Europe, 350-1900,' by Oliver J. Thatcher and Ferdinand Schwill, revised and adapted to the requirements of English Colleges and Schools by Arthur Hassall, M.A. Christ Church, Oxford, with bibliographies at the end of each section, with maps, genealogical tables; 'Spanish Grammar,' with exercises, vocabularies, and materials for conversation, Part I., Nouns, Adjectives, Pronouns, &c.; Part II., Verbs, &c., with Copious Vocabularies, by Don Fernando de Arteaga, Taylorian Teacher of Spanish in the University of Oxford. This book has in the main been formed on the plan of Sir Wm. Smith's well-known and deservedly popular 'Principia Latina,' Part I. 'A Greek Grammar for Schools,' by John Thompson, M.A. One of the chief objects of this book is to bring within the reach of the younger generation of students and schoolboys some of the results of the linguistic discoveries of the present day. 'Murray's Handy Classical Maps,' a new system, edited by G. B. Grundy, M.A. Brasenose College, Oxford. The Maps in Sir William Smith's Classical Atlas, engraved at a cost of several thousands of pounds, are regarded as among the best of the kind in existence, but hitherto they have only been published in a costly form, practically inaccessible to school-boys and many students. Mr. G. B. Grundy, of Brasenose College, Oxford, whose name is a sufficient guarantee of the excellence and scholarly character of the work, has undertaken to edit the series to bring it up to date in the light of modern research, and to make it suitable for school and college use. The form of their issue is entirely novel, and will, we think, commend itself to teachers. The maps will be published separately, mounted on cloth, with an index of names, and folded in a cover similar to those used for tourist and cycling maps, though somewhat larger. 'Little Arthur's History of Greece,' by the Rev. A. S. Walpole, M.A., with maps and illustrations; 'The Student's Gibbon,' a History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, abridged from the original work by Sir Wm. Smith, D.C.L., LL.D., A new and revised edition in two parts; Part I., from the Accession of Commodus to the Death of Justinian, by A. H. J. Greenridge, M.A.; Part II., from A.D. 565 to the Capture of Constantinople by the Turks, by J. G. C. Anderson, M.A., with maps and illustrations; 'The Sunrise of Revelation,' New Testament teachings for secondary schools, by Miss M. Bramston. This volume contains six of the 'Golden Lectures' for 1901. 'Commercial Knowledge,' a manual of business methods and transactions, by Algernon Warren. This textbook of Handelswissenschaft is designed for the use of students who intend to enter the higher branches of commercial life.

The cheaper edition of Charles Darwin's Works: 'The Descent of Man, and Selection in Relation to Sex,' with illustrations; 'A Naturalist's Voyage,' with many illustrations; 'The Origin of Species by means of Natural Selection,' with portrait. Mr. Murray desires to inform the public that the edition which has just lost copyright is the imperfect edition which was subsequently thoroughly revised by Mr. Darwin. This imperfect edition has been reprinted by other publishers without the consent or authority of Mr. Darwin's representatives. The only authorised and complete editions are those published by Mr. Murray (2 vols. 12s.; 1 vol. 6s., 2s. 6d. net, and 1s. net), and these do not lose copyright for several years to come. Also, just published, an edition of 'The Origin of Species.'—'The Domain of Art,' the Slade Lectures for 1901-2, by Sir W. Martin Conway; 'The Student's Manual of English Literature,' a History of English Literature and of the chief English Writers, a new and thoroughly revised edition, founded upon the manual of Thomas B. Shaw, by A. Hamilton Thompson, B.A.; 'National Education: Essays towards a Constructive Policy,' edited by Laurie Magnus, M.A.—'The Student's History of Rome,' by H. G. Liddell, D.D.; a new and revised edition, incorporating the results of modern research, by P. V. N. Benecke, M.A., with coloured and other maps and numerous illustrations.—'The Fine Arts: the Origin, Aims, and Condition of Artistic Work as applied to Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture,' by G. Baldwin Brown, M.A., new edition, with many new illustrations.

Mr. Murray's 'Home and School Library,' edited by Laurie Magnus, M.A. This series of volumes is intended for the general reader as well as for school use. 'Algebra, Part I.,' by E. M. Langley, M.A., and S. N. R. Brady, M.A.; 'A First Course of Practical Science,' with full directions for experiments and numerous exercises, by J. H. Leonard, B.Sc., with a preface by Dr. Gladstone, F.R.S.: these lessons are taught on the heuristic method, with a view to stimulating the learner's powers of observation and experiment; 'First Makers of England: Julius Cæsar, King Arthur, Alfred the Great,' by Lady Magnus, with illustrations; 'A Short History of Coinage,' by Lord Avebury, F.R.S., &c., with many illustrations; 'Heroes of the West,' a Biographical Sketch of Modern History, by the Rev. A. J. and Mrs. Carlyle and F. S. Marvin, M.A., 2 vols.; 'Telegraphs and Telephones,' by Sir W. H. Preece, K.C.B. &c.; 'Electric Wiremen's Work,' by W. C. Clinton, B.Sc. (Lond.). The above two volumes are written with particular reference to the requirements of the examinations of the City and Guilds of London Institute. 'Village Lectures on Popular Science,' by the Rev. C. T. Ovenden, D.D., with numerous diagrams, 2 vols. In active preparation: 'Outline of History of Commerce,' by C. S. Fearenside, M.A.; 'Plato's "Republic,"' by Prof. Lewis Campbell; 'The Life of Christ,' by the Rev. H. C. Beeching, M.A.; 'Music,' by A. Kalisch, B.A.; 'Introduction to Philosophy,' by S. Rappoport, Ph.D.; 'The Calculus for Artisans,' by Prof. O. Henrici, F.R.S. &c.; Tennyson's 'Æneid,' by Laurie Magnus.

Mr. Murray's new series of Secondary Education Text-Books, edited by Laurie Magnus, M.A., Magdalen College, Oxford: 'Commercial German,' in 2 Parts, by Gustav Hein and Michel Becker. Part I. With a map. This manual is uniform with the first part of 'Commercial French,' and is specially adapted for the use of students in commercial classes and continuation schools. 'Intermediate French Accidence and Outlines of Syntax,' with historical notes, by G. H. Clarke, M.A., and L. R. Tanqueray, B. ès. L.—'An Introduction to the Study of Poetry,' by Laurie Magnus, designed to instruct pupils in the middle and upper forms of schools with the elements of taste and judgment in poetry by the natural or direct method of literature-teaching.—'The Soil,' by A. D. Hall, M.A., Principal of the South-Eastern Agricultural College. This volume, by the Principal of the County Council College at Wye, is the first of a group of text-books intended for the use of students in agriculture. Other volumes, which will be duly announced, will deal with 'Plant Physiology,' 'Manures,' &c.—'Britain over the Sea,' a Reader for Schools, compiled and edited by Elizabeth Lee, with 4 maps of the British Empire at different periods; 'Commercial French,' in 2 parts, by W. Mansfield Poole, M.A., and Michel Becker, with a map in each volume.

Messrs. T. NELSON & SONS.

Among recent additions to the Royal School Series we notice: 'Pictures of the Empire,' a fine series of large coloured illustrations of places of importance in the British dominions. Hong Kong, Cape Town, Sydney Harbour, Portsmouth Harbour, and Falls of Niagara, have just been added to the series. They form artistic school-wall decorations, while providing material for the geographical object lesson. 'Nelson's New Drawing Course,' by J. Vaughan, is a complete and practical set of sheets, cards, and handbooks on drawing, design, and manual occupations, which any teacher of these subjects would do well to become acquainted with. 'Commercial Arithmetic,' by G. E. Dench, just issued by Messrs. Nelson, should prove of much service in secondary and polytechnic schools, as well as in the higher elementary schools, dealing, as it does, in a complete though concise manner with so necessary a branch of commercial training as business arithmetic. 'Our Own Country Series' is a series, now publishing, of bright little Histories of the Counties and Districts of Great Britain; 'A Little History of the Midlands' has just been added to it. 'Royal Princess Reader, No. 5,' with coloured illustrations; a set of 'Ten Animal Pictures for the Infant School,' exceptionally cheap and good; 'Class Lessons in Domestic Economy,' by Ethel R. Lush, framed on the principles of object-teaching; and two small and attractive volumes of 'Ballads of British History' are also among Messrs. Nelson's recent issues, and distinctly sustain the reputation of their Royal School Series.

Messrs. SCOTT, GREENWOOD & CO.

The 'Manual of Agricultural Chemistry,' by Herbert Ingle, of the Yorkshire College, Leeds, will be ready next month; 'The Chemistry of Pigments,' by E. J. Parry, B.Sc. (Lond.) and J. H. Coste, has just been published; 'Cotton Combing Machines,' by Thomas Thornley, of the Bolton Technical School, will be ready shortly, forming a companion volume to those on 'Cotton Spinning' for students; 'The Chemical Technology of Textile Fibres' translated from the German of Dr. G. von Georgievics, will be ready in a few weeks. This book deals with spinning, washing, bleaching, dyeing, printing, and finishing. Other books now in the press suitable for students, technical schools and manufacturers, are the 'Dyeing of Woollen Fabrics' by Franklin Beech; 'Siderology, or the Science of Iron,' 'The Art of Glass Staining,' 'Evaporation, Condensation, and Cooling,' 'Properties and Uses of Timber,' 'Lead and its Compounds,' 'Prevention of Dampness in Buildings,' &c.

A work which will be of interest to all technical schools and colleges is 'A Handy Guide to Technical, Trade, and Commercial Literature,' which is now in active preparation, and which the publishers expect to issue in June next. All the principal books in print will be strictly classified under the headings of the various trades, forming a comprehensive Bibliography and Subject Index to British and American Technical Publications.

Messrs. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & CO., London.

Recent Publications:—Professor Spiers' Works: 'Graduated Course of Translation into French Prose,' for middle and higher forms of schools and for University Colleges, third edition; 144 extracts of convenient length with carefully worked-out correct versions. 'Drill on the Essentials of French Accidence and Syntax,' fourth edition enlarged; a complete Elementary Grammar, containing the conjugations and 'drill' (in French sentences) upon the important points and rules, a short summary of which is given; most handy for correspondence classes; 'Practical French Grammar,' for schools and colleges, second edition, 'a really practical and sensible grammar.' 'French Vocabulary for Repetition,' second edition, containing the 3,000 most important words and phrases logically grouped in tens, and divided into two categories (elementary and advanced), with the most useful derivations, preceded by a short note on pronunciation, and followed by an appendix in the different prepositions required by French verbs. 'First French Book for Children,' on modern lines, second edition, with conversations, music, and illustrations. 'Short French Historical Grammar and Etymological Lexicon' (2,500 words); for schools and colleges. 'Junior French Reciter,' extracts in prose and poetry from classical authors with phonetic transcript facing the text, with notes, questions on grammar, and outlines of conversations and of free written exercises; first edition exhausted, second edition in press. German Vocabulary on the same lines as the French Vocabulary. In preparation: Second French Book on the same lines as the First French Book; Senior French Reciter on the same lines as the First.

Notices of Books.

From Messrs. Allman & Son, Limited.—'Dual Reader (German-English),' by Oliver Jones, B.A. This is an addition to the already large number of elementary reading books. It consists of some forty-six lessons, of which the German version occupies the left hand page and the English the right, so that the two face one another, and reference can be exchanged at a glance. Each lesson is divided into three parts, respectively devoted to spelling, reading, and conversation. The words set for spelling are those which occur in the reading sentences that follow, and the conversational phrases at the foot of the page are frequently repeated in the different lessons in order to ensure the pupil's thorough acquaintance with good idiomatic German. Mr. Jones may be complimented on a highly-efficient little work, which is calculated to be of great assistance in the acquirement of a knowledge of German.

From the same.—'A Text-book of Elementary Botany,' by Charlotte L. Laurie, with illustrations by W. L. Boys-Smith. Miss Laurie's work is principally designed for the use of students preparing for the Junior Oxford and Cambridge Examinations, but it is also hoped that it will be found interesting by beginners generally. The volume is arranged in three parts, whereof the first treats of the structure and growth of the Flowering Plant; the second is devoted to a consideration of the classification, distribution, and habitat of Flowering Plants, with the characteristics of a few Orders; and the third deals with the Physiology of the Plant. Miss Laurie has happily avoided as far as possible the use of technical language, which is apt to confuse and discourage the beginner, and when such terms are unavoidably introduced they have been carefully explained. Her work should be found very useful by candidates for the examinations named, and might also with advantage be adopted by some of the schools where the subject is taught. Miss Boys-Smith has materially aided in the success of the book by the excellence of her illustrations, and a good word should also be found for Miss Amy Johnson, whose experiments in the section on Physiology add not a little to the practical teaching of the manual.

From Mr. Edward Arnold.—'King Edward's Cookery Book,' by Florence A. George. As mistress of cookery in King Edward's High School for Girls, Birmingham, the writer of this book should speak with authority; and she states that she has experienced the need of a suitable text-book of the culinary art; an art so important in itself and also as a training in thoroughness, neatness, method, and order, and calculated to be of service in after life. She appears to have thoroughly succeeded in her meritorious aim of writing a clear, concise, and methodical guide containing all that middle-class Englishwomen should know about cookery. For educational reasons she has also given principles and rules by which to work. An introductory chapter on scullery work, cooking ranges, and heat; a culinary vocabulary; appendices giving lists of things obtainable in different months and of cooking utensils, materially enhance the value of one of the most practical and consequently most useful cookery books that has come under our notice.

From Messrs. G. W. Bacon & Co., Limited.—'Brush Work and Designs,' by Frank Steeley. Part III. This is the continuation of a work of which we have had occasion to speak favourably when noticing previous parts.

The present volume contains 120 exercises^s for advanced classes. The plates have evidently been designed with great care, and are well calculated to excite the interest and promote the skill of the pupil.

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'Selections from Cicero,' by Joseph F. Charles, B.A.; 'P. Vergili Maronis Aeneidos, Liber Quintus,' edited by J. T. Phillipson, M.A. ('Bell's Illustrated Classics.') We have nothing but praise for these carefully prepared little volumes. Alike in matter of introduction, text, notes, vocabulary, printing and binding, they are admirable. Mr. Charles's selections from Cicero are designed to show the many and varied characteristics of the Latin author. Included in the volume are a number of useful exercises, together with an appendix of cases and conjunctions, and an index of proper names. The Fifth Book of Vergil's Aeneid has received every attention from Mr. Phillipson, and the notes are especially helpful without being overdone. In both volumes the illustrations, drawn from authentic sources with a view to explaining the text and making the reader familiar with Greek and Roman life, form a highly commendable feature, and are certain to stimulate the interest of the scholar. Mr. E. C. Marchant, the general editor of the series, may be warmly congratulated on the success that has attended his undertaking.

From the same.—'Elementary Inorganic Chemistry,' by James Walker, D.Sc., F.R.S. ('Bell's Science Series.') The ordinary student who goes to a college or university, and there continues the subject of chemistry as part of a course in science or medicine, has little time for practical work, though at school he may have leisurely discovered facts for himself, and have interpreted them in their mutual connections. In even an elementary university course, as Professor Walker points out, the student is suddenly confronted by a bewildering multitude of details, which he must learn from his lecture notes or a text book, for now the limited time at his disposal will not permit of his working out solutions for himself. This volume, therefore, has been written with the object of aiding him in the difficulty here indicated. The general principles which he first learnt from his own laboratory experiences are so emphasised as to enable him to extend his knowledge in various directions and to connect and correlate apparently isolated facts. Throughout the book the author has been careful not to obtrude the theoretical side of his subject, for the reason that it is likely to have little appreciation from the beginner. The philosophy of chemistry in his opinion should only come at the end of an elementary university course, when the student has acquired a sound knowledge of the facts and principles of the science. Of the book itself we can speak in terms of high praise. It is clear, concise, suitably illustrated, and excellently printed and bound. A more serviceable volume within its limits it would be impossible to mention.

From the same.—'A First Greek Reader in Two Progressive Parts, with Hints and Vocabulary,' by E. C. Marchant, M.A. This little manual is intended to be to the beginner in Greek what Messrs. Bell's excellent Scala Prima is to his fellow schoolmate in Latin. The book takes the learner up to the stage of Xenophon. After being primed with a list of 'Points to Remember'—such as that a plural neuter subject has its verb in the singular, the difference of meaning between imperfect and aorist tenses, and so forth—the scholar is launched on a series of simple sentences which gradually increase in difficulty until short continuous pieces are reached. Part II. of the book consists of twenty exercises on the subject of the adventures of Odysseus, adapted from the Odyssey and turned into simple prose, which is meant to be Attic. For such a proceeding the editor pleads as an excuse 'the intense interest and remarkable suitability of the stories, and also the bad example set so long ago by Lucian.' There are a large number of illustrations and an excellent vocabulary.

From Messrs. Adam & Charles Black.—'North America Selected,' by F. Herbertson, B.A. (Lond.). Edited, with introduction, by A. J. Herbertson, Ph.D. (Freiburg i. B.), F.R.S.E. This carefully selected and beautifully illustrated volume forms one of Messrs. A. & C. Black's series, 'Descriptive Geographies from Original Sources.' As the compilers state in the preface, it attempts to depict the world in language of men who have seen it. The difficulties of such a task are manifest; but both selector and editor have succeeded in producing a homogeneous and informing work. Yet, as the series is intended to stimulate and not to supersede individual reading, additional references are given and a full bibliography is added. The very best writers have been laid under contribution, and the book is anything but dry. The illustrations are numerous and beautiful. Indeed, the volume is one that the general reader as well as the geographical student should possess.

From the same.—'La très joyeuse Histoire du bon Chevalier sans peur et sans reproche le gentil Seigneur du Bayard,' par le loyal Serviteur, abrégée et modernisée par W. G. Hartog, Professeur de Français au 'Liverpool Institute.' This modernised and abridged edition of the loyal Serviteur's story of the Chevalier Bayard's doughty deeds is intended for pupils in their fourth year of instruction. It forms one of a series of illustrated elementary reading books, dealing mainly with French life, past and present, either specially written or carefully adapted in simple language. The excellent treatment of the loyal Serviteur's narrative augurs well for the success of the series. The notes are clear and adequate, the illustrations good, and a useful vocabulary is appended.

From the same.—'Boys and Girls of Other Days; a Reader for Upper Standards,' by John Finnemore, illustrated. Second series. The writer of this capital collection of historical tales says, truly enough, that it is possible for children to be perfect in facts and dates, and yet to have no idea of the hues which life wore in far-off days. Indeed, they often regard the people of those distant times as pure abstractions and not as creatures of flesh and blood. So he has tried to set the child's imagination to work by placing before it stories and pictures of boys and girls of about their own age who take part in the events of their long by past days. There are seven of these stories: 'The Rising of Lambert Simnel,' 'Evil May Day,' 'The Invincible Armada,' 'The Gunpowder Plot,' 'Royalist and Roundhead,' 'The Great Plague,' and 'After Sedgemoor.' We should think it impossible for children to read these well-written and beautifully illustrated stories without deriving pleasure and profit from their perusal; and, although the writer does not claim for his stories that history can be properly learned from them, a slight thread of fact connects them together, and they are likely to give children a taste for historical narrative.

From Messrs. Blackie & Son, Limited.—'Caesar's Gallic War, Book III,' edited by John Brown, B.A.; 'The Aeneid of Virgil,

THE ALPHABET, IN GREEK, RUSSIAN, AND GERMAN LETTERS

'Messrs. Gilbert & Rivington, Ltd., of London, who can print books and pamphlets in almost any language, kindly prepared these Greek, Russian, and German Alphabets for us.'—EDITOR, Publishers' Circular, Jan. 18, 1902.

N.B.—Please mention the special subject required. A Complete List of the admirable Editions of the Greek and Latin Classics published by Holtze and Teubner, of Leipzig, can also be had.

Book I,' edited by H. B. Cotterill, M.A. ('Blackie's Illustrated Latin Series,' edited by R. T. Tyrrell, D.C.L.). The former of these two volumes was first published in 1897, and since then its great and well-merited success has necessitated several reprints. The present edition has been revised, re-set, and more fully illustrated. It is now about as complete a school book as could well be wished for. It is no slight praise to say that Mr. Cotterill's edition of Book I. of the Aeneid is well worthy to be classed with it. The introduction is a particularly capable piece of work, containing an account of Virgil's life, as gathered from his writings, his contemporaries, and later biographers. A detailed criticism is also given of his three great books, the Bucolica, the Georgica, and the Aeneis. Of the last named the argument is concisely narrated, and a section is devoted to the legends of Aeneas and Dido. Every endeavour has apparently been made to render the subject attractive to the youthful student, and so make his work lighter and more agreeable. In any difficulty he may meet with he will derive able assistance from the notes, the illustrations can scarcely fail to awaken his interest, and an excellent vocabulary lies at his service. Equally meritorious in its general features with the above is the Rev. E. C. Everard Owen's edition of 'The Odyssey of Homer, Book I,' in Blackie's Illustrated Greek Series—also produced under the editorial supervision of Professor Tyrrell. The volume consists of an interesting introduction concerning Homer's life, his poems, and their history, their influence on the Greeks, the literary characteristics of Homer, and so forth; the text of the Odyssey, exceedingly well printed; and about thirty pages of notes. The illustrations are a marked feature of the production. Each of these volumes, it may be mentioned, can be had either with or without a vocabulary. Two other works received from Messrs. Blackie, that may appropriately be classed with the above, are 'The Latin Period,' an elementary exercise book, by E. A. Wells, M.A., and 'A First Latin Course,' by E. H. Scott, B.A., and Frank Jones, B.A. Each is evidently prepared from a thoroughly practical knowledge of the requirements of junior scholars in Latin, and can be confidently recommended to the notice of teachers.

From the same.—'A Brief Sketch of French History, 1789-1815,' by Leon Guilgault; 'A Brief Sketch of French History, 1815-1873,' by Henry Hirsch, B.A. These little works, though apparently written quite independently of each other, practically form a continuous history of France from the time of the French Revolution until the early years of the Republic. They are, however, prepared from somewhat different motives, M. Guilgault's book being primarily intended for students preparing for examinations under the Intermediate Education Board for Ireland, though it will be found equally serviceable by students reading for the Army and Higher Civil Service Examinations, while Mr. Hirsch's object has been to provide an English text-book for the use of his own class at Campbell College, which may also prove helpful in other schools studying the same period in French History. Both volumes are excellently compiled, and not the least point in their favour is the clear unaffected style in which the History is related.

From the same.—'Blackie's Illustrated Continental Readers: Europe.' This is one in a series of five volumes dealing with the continents individually. Each gives attractive well-written information regarding the physical, political, and commercial geography of the various countries comprised within these areas. Sketch maps in illustration of the text are introduced wherever they are likely to be useful, and a valuable feature of the book is the synopsis at the end, which fills in details necessarily omitted from the general account, and is particularly noticeable for a number of coloured maps. Throughout the book the desire on the part of the promoters to render the production bright and attractive to young scholars is most pleasantly apparent.

From Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons.—'Virgil: Book I,' edited by John Sargeant, M.A. ('Blackwood's Classical Texts'). This contains an introduction on the life and works of Virgil, a chronological table, the text of the first Georgic, and upwards of five hundred clearly expressed notes. In the appendices are given various passages from Hesiod, Aratus, and Eratosthenes (with side numbers referring to lines of the Georgic), several notes on select words, and a brief account of the flora of the classic. The last named, so far as we know, is a fresh departure in a work of this modest description. Whether Virgil was a botanist is at least open to question. Mr. Sargeant argues that no reader practically acquainted with the science would have any doubts on the matter. The illustrations in this edition might advantageously be extended and improved.

From the same.—Scott's 'Marmion,' by Alexander Mackie, M.A. ('Blackwood's English Classics'). Admirably printed and appropriately bound, with an excellent introduction and most discriminating notes, this is an edition of the Scottish poem that may well be recommended to the attention of head masters of schools. A map showing Marmion's route to Edinburgh and Tantallon is given with the text, and also a diagram of the Battle of Flodden. The frontispiece to the volume is a reproduction of Sir Edwin Landseer's celebrated portrait of Scott in the National Portrait Gallery. We are glad to note in the introduction that Mr. Mackie does not dwell too long on the critical estimate of the poem. Young readers care little about carefully analysing the literary merits of a work, nor, indeed, is it advisable that their critical faculties should be too sharply developed.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'The Choephoroi of Aeschylus, with Critical Notes, Commentary, Translation, and a Recension of Scholia,' by T. G. Tucker, Litt.D. It is not too much to say that every page of this volume reveals the most painstaking labour. Professor Tucker tells us that ever since his edition of the 'Supplines' in 1889 his reading has been largely directed towards further work upon Aeschylus, and his present work shows the result of his researches. Apparently every authority of importance has been consulted, and their views and suggestions carefully considered and sifted. Blomfield, Klausen, Paley, Hermann, Conington, Weil, Dehlein, Sidgwick, Verrall, Campbell—all have been passed under review and their opinions critically weighed. It is to Conington and Verrall in the preparation of his work that Professor Tucker is chiefly indebted. To the latter he especially pays a tribute of praise. 'Dr. Verrall's edition' he says, 'is one which cannot but stimulate by its freshness and independence. As is the case with all those who honestly study his work upon Aeschylus, my respect for his commentary increased with its use. In several passages, when, after long and repeated meditation, I have arrived at a conclusion which I believed to be new, but none the less inevitable, I have found the point already made, substantially or in part, by the keen insight of my predecessor.' All Greek scholars, but more particularly those who have devoted close attention to Aeschylus, will be greatly interested in Professor Tucker's critical introduction to the 'Choephoroi.' In this he gives an analysis of the play, and shows of what the pre-existing material consisted. A comparison is also drawn between the three dramas, the 'Electra' of Sophocles, the 'Electra' of Euripides, and the 'Choephoroi' of Aeschylus, and their various points of similarity are noted. The latter part of the introduction is devoted to a consideration of the text, a description of the Codex Mediceus, classification of textual errors, the Scholia as textual evidence, &c. Then follows the text of the play, with a wealth of insightful and valuable foot-notes. There are also several appendices, treating of matters connected with the subject of the book. Students of Aeschylus should be deeply grateful to Professor Tucker for the extreme care and earnest thought he has brought to the accomplishment of his task, and they will find much in his volume that is new and well worthy of reflection.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co., Ltd.—'Cassell's Eyes and No Eyes Series,' by Arabella B. Buckley (Mrs. Fisher). Book V., 'Trees and Shrubs'; Book VI., 'Insect Life.' These are splendid little books, thoroughly adapted to catch the interest of young people and to hold their attention throughout the various lessons. The language is clear and simple, without any of the 'embroidery' which juveniles so much dislike, and the beautiful coloured illustrations, as well as those inserted in the text, are certain to elicit their warm approval. No better or cheaper books could possibly be found to interest children in the surroundings of country life.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Tales of Passed Times,' told by Master Charles Perrault, with twelve illustrations by Charles Robinson. Young people will be highly delighted with this volume, and we are quite sure that the artistic setting in which the fairy stories have been framed by Messrs. Dent will not be unappreciated by them. In addition to Perrault's charming versions of Blue Beard, Cinderella, the Sleeping Beauty, Little Red Riding-Hood, and other warmly-esteemed friends of our childhood, the book contains 'Beauty and the Beast,' from the French of Le Prince de Beaumont, and the two fanciful stories by Mme. la Comtesse d'Aulnoy entitled 'The Benevolent Frog' and 'Princess Rosette.' Youngsters have a fine treat before them who first make acquaintance with these wonderful conceits through the pages of M. Perrault's volume. They have before had occasion to be grateful to the 'Temple Classics for Young People,' but their indebtedness is swollen to almost incalculable dimensions by the latest addition to the series.

From Messrs. Hachette & Co.—'Histoire de la Princesse Rosette' and 'La Petite Souris Grise,' by Madame la Comtesse de Ségur, edited with Grammatical and Explanatory Notes, a French-English Vocabulary, and a Table of French Irregular Verbs, by J. Maurice Rey, B. ès L. Few works will compare in distinction of design and practical usefulness with this addition to Messrs. Hachette's 'Elementary French Readers.' It is, indeed, a most capable work, calculated to be of the utmost assistance to beginners in French. The fairy stories of Madame de Ségur are in themselves well adapted for the purposes of instruction, being full of the more familiar, and therefore most useful, French idioms, and they have been rendered still further serviceable by suitable notes. In these attention has chiefly been directed to the practical and idiomatic rather than to the theoretical side of the French language. A very full vocabulary completes the work, and the list of irregular verbs will undoubtedly be found useful.—We have also received from Messrs. Hachette the 'Contes à ma Sœur,' of Hégésippe Moreau, with introduction, notes, and vocabulary by Charles Sarolea, D.Ph., a very acceptable contribution to the series of 'Short Masterpieces of French Prose,' published by this firm; a second and revised edition of the 'Vade Mecum of French Composition,' by Jules Lazare, B.ès L., and Herbert Marshall, M.A., which is well adapted for use in elementary and intermediate classes; several parts, dealing with different languages, of the 'Grammaire Intuitive,' which is designed on what is known as the Chartin method 'pour l'étude simultanée du Français, de l'Anglais, et de l'Allemand, à l'usage de tous les pays'; a new enlarged edition of 'Half Hours with Modern French Authors (Prose and Verse), including Typical Extracts from Popular Writers of the Day,' edited, with a French-English Vocabulary, by Jules Lazare, B.ès L.; Parts I. and II. of 'Half Hours with German Authors of the Day,' a companion volume by Aloys Weiss, D.D., which is well adapted, like the preceding work, for the use of intermediate and advanced pupils; and 'Elementary Lessons and Exercises in Colloquial French—Pronunciation, Conversation, Reading Exercises, Dictation, Rhymes, Home Work and Recapitulation,' compiled and edited by H. D'A. Hoffmann and C. Tobie. To the instructive value of several of these manuals we have alluded in previous Educational Numbers of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, and we have now but to repeat the favourable opinion we then expressed.

From the same.—'The Intermediate English Grammar,' by Charles Hart, B.A. English is admittedly one of the most difficult of languages and its grammar one of the least perfect; yet the author of the book before us has succeeded in removing many of the difficulties which stand in the way of the student and more particularly the foreign student of English. His experience as a teacher has stood him in good stead in this respect. For, as he tells us in his preface, he has had among his pupils French, German, Italian, Spanish, Norwegian, and Japanese, and he has carefully noted and explained with examples the many difficulties encountered by them in learning our language. One of the greatest difficulties is the right use of Prepositions, and to this a special chapter is devoted. A History of the English Language concisely and lucidly written precedes the Grammar itself, in which the rules of Syntax, Parsing, and Analysis are rendered clear and simple to the learner, who may easily attain to a thorough mastery of the construction of sentences and learn the correct arrangement of words in a sentence. Special sections are devoted to Punctuation and correct Spelling, and much attention is devoted to those important subjects, Composition and Derivation. A hundred admirable selections from our best authors for use in the classification of parts of speech and for parsing and analysis are given at the end of the book. We can conscientiously recommend Mr. Hart's 'Intermediate English Grammar' as the most practical English Grammar that has ever come under our notice.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'The Story of Joseph,' by J. R. Miller, D.D. The simplicity of this little book will to numerous readers prove its chief charm. Many lives of Joseph, as the author says, have been written, and some have been especially interesting and valuable in the light they have thrown on ancient Egypt and the manners and customs of its inhabitants. The desire in the present volume, however, is simply 'to find and interpret some of the lessons in life which the narrative has for its earnest readers.' Dr. Miller comments with great insight on the principal incidents in Joseph's career, and deduces therefrom such precepts as are worthy of deep reflection.

From Messrs. E. & S. Livingstone, Edinburgh.

—'Handbook of Public Health,' by John Orr, M.D. The object of this work is 'to describe in as concise a manner as possible those matters relating to public health which a medical student ought to know in order to fit him for his future duties as a Practitioner of Medicine.' There are, as Dr. Orr admits, already many excellent text-books on the subject, but they are for the most part so overburdened with detail that it is a little difficult for the student to extract the information that is essential to his purpose. Dr. Orr has throughout kept his subject well in hand, and, whether treating of air, soil, water supply, dwelling houses, communicable diseases, disposal of excreta and refuse, food and its relation to diseases, or the other topics that fall within range of his treatise, is invariably clear and concise. The book should prove of great service to those preparing for examination, and will be found of much interest by the medical practitioner as well.

From Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co.—

'Quain's Dictionary of Medicine,' edited by H. Montague Murray, M.D., assisted by John Harrold, M.B., and W. Cecil Bosanquet, M.A., M.D. This is the third edition, largely rewritten and revised, of a very notable work. 'Quain's Dictionary of Medicine' has now been before the public for many years, and by the accuracy of its contents, the information it affords on a wide range of medical subjects, and its general clearness and lucidity of explanation has earned a great reputation. The present edition, while preserving to a large extent the scheme of its original founder, Sir Richard Quain, exhibits many new and improved features. Several articles, excellent in themselves, but now a little out of keeping with the object of the work, have been excluded, while others rendered necessary by modern developments have been introduced. Surgery also demands greater recognition at the hands of medicine, and more space has been allotted to what are generally known as 'special branches.' Naturally, the work of revision, the incorporation of new articles, and the condensation or omission of others, has entailed no light labour, and it is much to the credit of all concerned that the volume should be so thoroughly accurate. The list of contributors alone occupies some ten pages, and among them we find such well-known names as Sir John Banks, Sir William Broadbent, Sir Joseph Fayrer, the late Sir William MacCormac, the late Sir William Roberts, Sir Henry Thompson, Sir Frederick Treves, Sir John Williams, Dr. William Playfair, Mr. Victor Horsley, Professor Greenfield, Dr. Cayley, Mr. Jonathan Hutchinson, Professor McKendrick, and Dr. William Rose. To say that 'Quain's Dictionary of Medicine' retains its old distinction of extreme accuracy and invaluable research is the highest compliment we can pay the book.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd.—

'Emare,' edited by A. B. Gough. This edition of the interesting old English romance of Emare, supposed to date from the second half of the 14th century, has been edited with loving care by Mr. A. B. Gough from the only known MS. in the Cotton collection at the British Museum, and forms one of the series of Old and Middle English Texts, edited by Professors L. Morsbach and F. Holthausen, to the latter of whom it is dedicated. As already stated, the romance is full of interest, and purchasers of this beautifully printed edition will have pleasure in the story and profit in acquiring some knowledge of 14th-century English, which they will find much easier to understand than they probably anticipated.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd.—

'The Talisman,' by Sir Walter Scott (abridged edition for schools). Of all Scott's novels, with the single exception of 'Ivanhoe,' none are better calculated to excite the interest of young people than 'The Talisman.' The story at once strikes the heroic adventurous vein, and this is maintained with fascinating brilliancy to the finish. Nothing could so forcibly show the advance that has been made in educational work within recent years than that such inspiring works should have been introduced to the exclusion of the old unattractive reading books. Naturally one resents a little the liberties taken with an old and highly esteemed friend in the way of abridgment, but it must at least be admitted that the work has been executed with great care. The illustrations, too, are for the most part capital, and will materially add to the attractions of the text, which is printed in clear large type and supplemented by numerous concise notes. Education is certainly offered to the pupil in this volume in very seductive guise.

From the same.—'Algebraical Examples supplementary to Hall and Knight's "Algebra for Beginners" and "Elementary Algebra" (Chaps. I.-XXVII.),' by H. S. Hall, M.A. This is an admirable little book for use in connection with the works mentioned in the title, or it may be employed separately. The exercises range from the simplest problems to quadratic equations. Opportunity has been taken to treat in fuller detail those examples which experience has shown are rather inadequately represented in Hall & Knight's Algebras. Each example is headed by a reference to the section in the text-book to which it refers, and distributed throughout the volume are a number of exceedingly useful test papers. Occasionally the author has added hints and short explanations. The book shows the thorough practical knowledge and care in preparation which distinguish all Mr. Hall's manuals.

From the same.—'The Teacher's Manual of Composition,' by Robert S. Wood. Vol. I.—Junior Course (for Infants and Standards I. and II.) The author of this useful little manual is already favourably known to those engaged in scholastic work by his volume on 'Word Building and Composition,' and he now lays them under further claims of indebtedness by fresh endeavour in the same direction. 'The Teacher's Manual of Composition' is published in three volumes, the first being designed for junior classes, the second for intermediate classes, and the third for senior classes. The course of instruction in each is carefully graduated. Thus, in Volume I, we commence with the oral formation of easy sentences and dictation of such sentences through word-building and sentence-building exercises, next proceed to the transcription of sentences previously built orally, and the oral reproduction by children of information obtained in object-lessons, passages read in class, and stories told by the teacher, and end with exercises for extending and exercising the vocabulary. It would be difficult to speak in terms of too high praise of Mr. Wood's work, or the admirable insight he displays in the arrangement of his subject.

From the same.—'Hygiene for Students,' by Edward F. Willoughby, M.D. Lond. In his preface the author informs his readers that this is a fourth edition, greatly enlarged and improved, of the 'Principles of Hygiene,' originally published by Messrs. Collins in 1884 and 1888, and then by Messrs. Macmillan in 1893. Designed, he tells us, from the first expressly as a manual for the examinations of the Science and Art Department, the syllabuses for the elementary and advanced stages have been followed, save that the immediate treatment of wounds, &c., has been omitted as irrelevant. To subjects indispensable to candidates for Honours and inspectors' certificates, &c., such consideration is given as the author thought conducive to the general usefulness of the work. He has omitted sanitary law, as a due treatment of the subject must have doubled the size of the volume. He condemns all chemical methods of the treatment of sewage, while he explains as fully as possible the working of bacterial tanks and filters, which he thinks should be adopted wherever irrigation cannot be used with advantage. Two subjects have especially attracted our attention in this book because of the clear insight shown by the author into their importance, and by his exposure of the fallacies incident to them. One is that portion of his chapter on School Hygiene relating to Female Education, which should be studied by all interested in the training of girls. The other is that part of the work which deals with demography, wherein the mistakes of vital statisticians are cleverly exposed. Dr. Willoughby has produced a most valuable and extremely interesting work, which students of hygiene will do well to select as their text-book.

From the same.—'Domestic Economy for Scholarship and Certificate Students,' by Ethel R. Lush. This is a manual principally designed to meet the requirements of students for the King's Scholarship Examination and the Certificate Examination of the Board of Education. Apart from this object, however, for which the volume is excellently qualified, it has considerable interest for teachers of domestic economy, who will find the book exceedingly helpful in preparing lessons for their classes. The author deals very expeditiously with the wide range of her subject, treating of the functions and classification of food, digestion, diet, animal and vegetable foods, beverages, clothing, washing, household management, furnishing, preservation of health, management of a sick room, and so forth, in a manner that shows a close intimacy with her subject; and as a rule her remarks are prompted by sound common-sense. A large number of illustrations contribute to the efficiency of the volume.

From Messrs. E. Marlborough & Co.—'Inter-linear German Reading Book,' by F. Hahn, edited and revised according to the New German Orthography by C. A. Thimm, F.R.G.S. The advantages possessed by this German Reader, originally edited by the late Mr. Franz Thimm, have long been recognised; and we are not surprised to learn that a new edition of it is demanded. For the purpose of this Reader is to show the exact idiom and grammatical construction of the language, by which plan the learner's progress is greatly facilitated; and, in order to make this yet more simple and clear, a literal English inter-linear translation on the Hamiltonian system is given to nearly all the tales, and explanatory notes have been added to difficult passages. The stories are taken from the best German authors, are full of interest and progress in difficulty from the first to the last. Mr. Franz Thimm has seized the opportunity of this new edition to correct the English Translation and to revise the text in accordance with the new Rules and Lists issued by the German Minister of Education, as the New Orthography is obligatory in the various competitive examinations of the present day.

From the same.—'French Poetry for Children,' selected by François Louis, seventh edition. We are not surprised that a seventh edition of this excellent selection of French poems for the little ones has been called for. It consists of one hundred and seventy-eight pieces by some of the best authors comprised in a handy, well-printed, and neatly bound volume.

From the same.—'A New Practical and Easy Method of Learning the German Language,' by Mathias Meissner, Twenty-third Edition. Meissner's German Grammar, which claims to be an improvement on Seidenstücker and Ahn's systems, and whose utility seems demonstrated by the fact of its having reached a twenty-third edition, has changed its proprietorship, and is now published by Messrs. E. Marlborough & Co.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'The Twentieth Century New Testament: a translation into Modern English made from the Original Greek (Westcott and Hort's Text).' Reference has already been made in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR to the interesting undertaking of a company of translators, consisting of about twenty members of various sections in the Christian Church, to present to English-speaking people a new translation of the New Testament Scriptures from the Greek text of Bishop Westcott and Dr. Hort into 'the English of their own time.' The work, which has occupied over ten years, is now completed by the issue of the Third Part, containing the Pastoral, Personal, and General Epistles or Letters, together with the Book of Revelation, sold for 1s., and of the entire Testament, the price of which is 3s. 6d. From the very full account of the work of the translators given in the preface it is manifest that it has been most carefully and conscientiously performed. That such a translation was needed seems demonstrated by the fact that the sale of the three parts has already far exceeded the most sanguine expectations of the translators, who still issue their translation in a tentative form and promise that due consideration shall be given to any criticisms and suggestions which may be sent to them with regard to it, as their earnest desire is to bring it up to as high a standard of accuracy and simplicity as may be practicable.

From the same.—'The Temple Reciter,' Part I., Verse: being a New Collection of Serious and Humorous Verse, suitable for Public Recitation,' edited by E. E. Speight, B.A. On the whole we have little fault to find with the work of selection as performed by Mr. Speight in this volume, though here and there—notably in the case of Walt Whitman—there are poems that seem a little out of place. Among the authors represented are Robert Southey, Edgar Allan Poe, Robert Browning, Tom Hood, Thackeray, Samuel Lover, Bret Harte, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Will Carleton, Sheridan Le Fanu, R. H. Stoddart, Lady Nairne, J. F. Waller, and Professor Blackie, so that a great diversity of subject and style is ensured.

From Mr. Elkin Mathews.—'Christopher Deane: a Character Study at School and College,' by E. H. Lacon Watson. We are not aware whether this is Mr. Watson's first essay in fiction, but if so he is to be heartily complimented on his work. No doubt the book for a number of readers will be wanting in movement, but by the more thoughtful class its close observation of character will more than compensate for any deficiency in incident. Moreover, there is a good honest tone about the story which can scarcely fail to make a favourable impression.

From Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd.—'Shakespeare's Complete Plays and Poems,' in three volumes. Tragedies, one volume; Histories and Poems, one volume; Comedies and Glossary, one volume. Whether the Gallopomania, of which Mr. Andrew Lang gossiped so scathingly and amusingly in our contemporary the Morning Post the other day, be destined (in spite of the convincing refutation of Mr. R. B. Marston and some few level-headed writers) to gain the suffrages of the majority of the public, and the educated minority be forced to bow down to Bacon as Shakespeare, we very much doubt. Meanwhile, believing ourselves in the fact that William Shakespeare, the poet, playwright, and play actor, was the author of his own plays and poems, we also believe that his writings have seldom if ever been placed before the reading public in a more acceptable form than in the beautifully printed edition before us. The illustrations by Mr. Edmund J. Sullivan are delightful embellishments to these three handy and handsomely bound volumes.

From Mr. Walter Scott.—'History of Geology and Palæontology to the end of the Nineteenth Century,' by Karl Alfred Von Zittel, translated by Maria M. Ogilvie-Gordon. ('Contemporary Science' series.) The introduction to Professor Zittel's work extends over no less than one hundred and fifty-two pages. It is divided into four periods, respectively devoted to a consideration of geological knowledge in the Ages of Antiquity, the beginnings of Palæontology and Geology, the heroic age of Geology extending from 1790 to 1820, and the newer development of these sciences. Having thus extensively cleared the ground, our author in succeeding chapters proceeds to discuss the cosmical, physiographical, and dynamical aspects of his subject, thence passing to the topics of peliography, palæontology, and stratigraphical geology. It is a very masterly treatise, written with a wide grasp of recent discoveries, and in its English form it owes not a little to the excellent translation of Miss Ogilvie-Gordon, who, herself a previous pupil of Professor Zittel, seems to have been especially happy in interpreting his words. The text of the original, it may be noted, has been somewhat curtailed in this reproduction, both in order to meet the desire of the author, and to secure uniformity with the other volumes of the 'Contemporary Science' series. Thus the chapter devoted to Topographical Geology has been omitted, also a list of books of reference, and in other ways the work has, where deemed feasible, been condensed. But these changes have, if anything, added to the value of the book, and have in all cases been made with Professor Zittel's approval. Several portraits are contained in the volume, including one of the author.

From Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Limited.—'British History made Interesting,' by Charles Villiers Hartley, Barrister-at-Law. The intention of this book is most laudable. The author says it is an attempt to provide persons who have left school, and whose knowledge of the history of their own country is limited, 'with an opportunity of acquiring such knowledge with as little labour and as much pleasure as possible.' He also thinks such books as this may tend to counteract one deplorable result of the working of the Education Acts, by which the extended taste for reading is so often thrown away upon trashy publications to the loss of the reader's time, and, as Mr. John Morley says, to the dispersal and disintegration of such intellect as he may possess. There is much of interest in this volume, on which the writer has evidently bestowed much time and labour. We doubt, however, the advantage to the reader of interrupting the narrative of events by interpolating special chapters on Christianity in Britain, the Persecution of the Jews, the Reformation, and Mary Queen of Scots. Some of those subjects seem to trench on the space of this volume of 180 pages, while there is rather a paucity of dates. We have full particulars of the dress of Mary Stuart at her execution, but are not told the date of her death. We note some errors in the chapter on the Reformation. According to Froude, Anne Boleyn appeared at Court as Maid of Honour to Catherine of Aragon in 1525, and not in 1522. It was Fisher, Bishop of Rochester, and not the Bishop of Winchester who was executed for refusing to take the oath of Supremacy. The name of the Bishop of St. Davids who was burned for heresy in Queen Mary's reign was Ferrars, and not Farrar.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

WILLIAM BLACK, Novelist.

A Memoir.

By SIR WEMYSS REID,

Author of 'Life of the Right Hon. W. E. Forster,' 'Life of Monckton Milnes, First Lord Houghton,' 'Life of Lord Playfair,' Editor of 'Life of W. E. Gladstone,' &c., &c.

SIR WEMYSS REID was on terms of familiar intercourse with Mr. Black for many years, and will write this Memoir from fulness of knowledge and in thorough sympathy with his subject. He has prepared this work in conjunction with the family of the late novelist, and has gone through a mass of correspondence, of which he has made full use in the preparation of the work.

Many facts of great interest with regard to the relationship between Mr. Black's novels and his own personal experience will be given. It is not generally known how close a connection existed between these. Strange as it may appear, the Novelist never described an imaginary scene. He was a keen student and observer of sea and sky, of mountain and torrent, of fen and moor, of tree and flower, and the local colour in his books, which lends them so engrossing a charm, was transferred from Nature to the printed page with a care that has never been exceeded by the most careful of landscape painters.

There is much of interest in his early life that will be set forth in the pages of the work.

His friendships with men of letters, artists, statesmen, and other celebrities of his time will be fully dealt with in the course of the Memoir. The Novelist was an excellent raconteur, and some good stories will enliven the pages of the book.

The account of Mr. Black's visit to America and his experiences there, his views of Americans and their ways, are likely to command special attention on both sides of the Atlantic.

Above all, the personality of Mr. Black, the charm he exercised in his relations with the inner circle of his friends, will be fully conveyed to the reader in the pages of the book.

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

THE HYMNAL COMPANION

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. Bishop E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D. (late of Exeter)

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—84 Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

German Lesson Books

FIRST GERMAN BOOK. By A. L. BECKER. 24mo. 1s.

Grammar, Conversation, and Translation, with a List of useful Words to be committed to memory.

JACKSON'S GERMAN COPY-BOOK. A Graduated Course of Exercises in Modern German Handwriting. By JOHN JACKSON, F.E.I.S. Sewed, 8vo. 6d.

CHILDREN'S OWN GERMAN BOOK (Low's Series). Amusing and instructive stories; also, easy poems, with a complete German-English vocabulary, by A. L. MEISSNER. Small 8vo. 1s. 6d.

The prose pieces are chosen as being without grammatical difficulties, and homely in their diction. The poetical part consists of poems of the highest merit, known to every German child.

FOUQUÉ'S SINTRAM IN GERMAN. Sewed, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.

FOUQUÉ'S UNDINE IN GERMAN. Square 18mo. 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

GERMAN. ILLUSTRATED PRIMER (Low's German Series). First steps in German, by W. COLLETT SANDARS. Small 8vo. 1s.

An easiest introduction for all beginners. Extreme distinctness of type is one of the characteristics.

LOW'S FIRST GERMAN READER. By MEISSNER. Episodes from German history, and select stories, with grammatical and explanatory notes. Small 8vo. 1s. 6d.

For children from ten to fourteen. The extracts are mostly progressive according to their difficulty. Hardly any of them have been employed in this manner before. The concluding selections are from a novel of the campaign of 1866, 'De Schlacht bei Langensalza' ('The Battle of Langensalza'), by Meding, written under the pseudonym of Gregor Samarow—which has acquired a great reputation.

SECOND GERMAN READER (Low's Series). A series of pictures of life, from contemporary German writers, with grammatical and explanatory notes by A. L. MEISSNER. Small 8vo. 1s. 6d.

These are readings in prose fiction. Among the sources are Freytag's 'Soll and Haben' and his 'Brüder vom deutschen Hause.' The novels of Auerbach, Hackländer, and Paul Heyse also contribute.

ADVANCED GERMAN READER (Low's Series). Goethe's 'Prosa'; selections from his prose works, with introductions and notes by C. A. BUCHHEIM. Small 8vo. 2s. 6d.

'Most of those who have arrived at an understanding of Goethe's prose will admit that it would have saved them much time and labour if they had had a guide. Goethe has expressed his ideas in a language created by him.... Neither dictionaries nor grammars furnish the reader with sufficient means to comprehend the depths of Goethe's writings.... His style is more idiomatic than that of any other German writer.'—PREFACE.

GERMAN READER (Low's Series). Schiller's 'Prosa'; selections with copious notes by C. A. BUCHHEIM. Small 8vo. cloth, 2s. 6d.

Pieces taken chiefly from the 'Geisterseher,' the 'Abfall der vereinigten Niederlande,' and from the 'Dreissigjähriger Krieg.'

GERMAN PREPOSITIONS AT A GLANCE. By C. KAISER and A. THOUAILLE. 1s.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., Limited.

TWO 'SUCCESSFUL NOVELS.'

Is it not a mockery of justice to find that in this England of to-day we turn the terrors of the law on to a poor devil who tries to earn a living by secretly selling 'indecent literature' to people who want it?—we literally hunt him to death—the last victim of our virtue had an inquest held on him in the felon's cell where he had died from fright. We say, is not this a mockery, when the two most successful English society novels of last year—'Anna Lombard' and 'Sir Richard Calmady'—are praised to the skies by most of the leading literary journals, and their authors, both, we believe, Englishwomen, are patted on the back and implored to give us more of the same sort?

One of our reviewers, who had 'Anna Lombard' sent to him for notice, wrote to us to say that he did not like to say what he thought about it, as it might shock our readers, and besides it would offend the publisher and we should lose his support. Well, there is something in that, we dare not say what we think of the books in question for fear of losing the advertisements of the firms who publish them.

The saddest part of it all to us is that women should dare to degrade their sex by such descriptions as are given in these two books. Zola would blush to read them to himself, and he is not squeamish—neither are we, but we draw the line at having glowing pictures by women of abominable women held up as patterns of what makes a successful novel; while, as we said before, the poor devil who secretly sells far less injurious literature is hounded to death.

The best proof of the real character of these works, in spite of all the praise of the critics, is that men in the smoking-room damn them with no faint praise—but with the most virile and emphatic language. Now, in the smoking-room, or over a game of billiards, after dinner, it is not usual even for English gentlemen to mince their conversation—they call a spade a spade, and quite properly too, and, as an English officer said to us with regard to the books we have mentioned, they made even his hardened stomach revolt.

But our readers will say, why do the critics praise and encourage such writers? Why, because they cannot help themselves; they are, like us, afraid to say what they think, for fear they offend their public and supporters.

Such books as these ought to be labelled 'poison' as some kinds of drugs have to be, and then the libraries and booksellers would know how to deal with them.

'AT THE SIGN OF THE SHIP.'

Having been told that Mrs. Gallup is contemplating an action for libel against the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, we are very glad to find that Mr. Andrew Lang is in the same boat, as the following extracts from his always amusing notes 'At the Sign of the Ship,' or 'Shippe,' as Mrs. Gallup calls it, will show.

The notes will appear in the February number of Longman's Magazine, and we hear Mr. Lang is putting more shocking libels still into the February number of the Monthly Review—so we shall have very good company in the Dock—we say 'we shall'—Mr. Lang may of course think differently.

This Baconian controversy has done good in calling more attention to the writings of Viscount Verulam than they have ever had before in so short a time.

From Mr. Lang's Notes.

'Talking of Bacon's tragedies, Mr. Mallock's article on Bacon's "Bilateral Cypher" (Nineteenth Century, December) was like a bolt from the blue. Yet I cannot (to abandon this fine irony) say credo tonantem. Having read great piles of the books, American and English, which try to prove that Bacon was the author of Shakespeare's plays, I have found in them nothing but ignorance and impudence. On studying Mrs. Gallup's work—the theme of Mr. Mallock—I discovered that, if Bacon was rightly deciphered by Mrs. Gallup, Bacon was insane and a liar. He made statements which a very slender knowledge of history proves to be, not only false, but from Bacon (if sane) impossible.

'Then comes Mr. Mallock, who, very properly, has worked at the cypher, and often finds that his reading of it agrees with Mrs. Gallup's. Now this cannot be a chance coincidence. Mr. Mallock is not a specialist in old forms of typography, but he was right in "trying all things." We wait to hear what the experts in typography have to say. Mr. Sidney Lee, having studied the typography of the Folio, denies that it can contain any cypher! Meanwhile, if Mrs. Gallup has deciphered correctly, there are at least two difficulties. First, Bacon makes statements which cannot be true, on points of history; statements which he, of all men, knew to be false. The second impossibility is that in Bacon's summary and translation of the "Iliad," deciphered by Mrs. Gallup, he borrows the version of the "Catalogue of the Ships" directly from Pope, who took great liberties with Homer, liberties closely copied by Bacon. Now, Bacon was dead very many years before Pope was born. This curious theft was pointed out by a sportsman, Mr. Marston, in the Times, and I have more than verified it. Mrs. Gallup's "Bacon" is like the dead who speak through her countrywoman, Mrs. Piper; they are extremely fluent and verbose—when they have nothing in particular to say. But, when you put to them a searching question, about what they could not but know, they shuffle, prevaricate, and lie. Proofs of their identity (as far as I have observed) they never give, though some inquirers think otherwise.'

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

All the correspondents who went round the world with the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York seem to be getting out books about it. On Wednesday last Messrs. Longmans published what is certain to be one of the best, as it is by Mr. E. F. Knight, Special Correspondent of the Morning Post, viz. 'With the Royal Tour,' a narrative of the recent tour of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York, with map and 16 illustrations.

* *

Another of Messrs. Longmans' new books which promises to be very interesting is 'Some Unpublished Letters of Horace Walpole,' edited by Sir Spencer Walpole, K.C.B., with two portraits.

Mr. Stephen Phillips has just revised the final proofs of his new drama 'Ulysses,' which will be published in book form by Mr. John Lane on February 11. The play will be produced on February 1 at Her Majesty's Theatre with Mr. H. Beerbohm Tree in the title rôle.

The Rev. H. Gee publishes with Messrs. Macmillan a short treatise on the 'Elizabethan Prayer Book and Ornaments.' Abandoning the traditional story of the revision as no longer tenable, the author endeavours to reconstruct an account of what actually took place. No attempt was made, he holds, to reintroduce the book of 1549, and though the Ornaments Rubric was kept, it was in his opinion practically superseded by the Injunctions made public after the book of 1559 came into use. Mr. Gee's argument and narration is based on more or less contemporary and original documents, a number of which are reproduced in the Appendix.

Her Majesty the Queen has been graciously pleased to express much pleasure in accepting a copy of Miss Constance Sutcliffe's newly published Alpine novel, 'Our Lady of the Ice.' When Princess of Wales, Queen Alexandra accepted many of Miss Sutcliffe's popular songs and also her volume of poems, 'Love Lyrics.'

Mr. George R. Sims, who speaks with authority on all matters concerning how the poor live, contributes to Part 7 of 'Living London' a special article entitled 'Evicted London,' which, accompanied with several realistic illustrations from photographs, shows what really happens when slum dwellers receive notice to quit their homes and find shelter elsewhere.

'The Church in London' is the title of a special article appearing in Part 7 of 'Living London,' written by the Rev. A. R. Buckland, the popular morning preacher at the Foundling Hospital. It is accompanied with several photographic and other illustrations.

In consequence of the large demand for Part I. of Messrs. Hutchinson & Co.'s new publication, 'Parliament Past and Present,' they have been obliged to print many thousands of copies beyond the first large edition. This will necessitate the postponement of the publication until February 3, but Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. expect on that date to make a simultaneous delivery throughout the Kingdom.

The February number of the English Illustrated Magazine will contain an article on 'Murillo in Madrid,' by S. L. Bensusan.

The Art Journal for February will contain an appreciation of the art of the late Kate Greenaway, by Mr. Austin Dobson.

Mr. Albert F. Calvert has just completed a new work on the Bacon-Shakespeare controversy, which will be published by Messrs. Dean & Son, Limited. Messrs. Dean say: 'Mr. Calvert's conclusions as to the authorship of the plays have the merit of novelty, since he claims to dispose of Bacon's pretensions without denying the existence of the much-discussed cypher. The book will be embellished with some twenty photogravure and other illustrations.' This is hardly fair to Sir Francis Bacon, as the 'pretensions' have all been invented for him more than two centuries after his death.

Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish next week another volume, issued in America, from the press of the Johns Hopkins University. The title is 'Contemporary American Opinion of the French Revolution,' by Dr. C. D. Hazen. A second impression of Maxim Gorky's novel of Russian life, 'Foma Gordyeff,' or 'Thomas the Proud,' will be issued by Mr. Fisher Unwin next week.

'English Clubs in All Parts of the World.' We are glad to get the 1902 edition—being the tenth year of issue of this most useful little work compiled by Mr. E. C. Austen Leigh, M.A., managing director of Messrs. Spottiswoode & Co. Ltd., New Street Square, E.C. It gives a list of 2,750 clubs frequented by the English in all parts of the world. Eight hundred golf clubs are included in this edition.

Two new volumes of Messrs. Dent's 'Temple Bible' are almost due. One will contain 'Ezra, Nehemiah, and Esther,' edited by the Rev. J. Wilson Harper, D.D., late Hebrew Tutor at New College, Edinburgh; the other, 'The Johannine Books,' edited by the Rev. Canon Benham, D.D.

The next volume in Messrs. Methuen's 'Junior School Books' series will be 'A Junior English Grammar,' by Mr. W. Williamson. In this book the author, while following the lines usually adopted, restates many of the definitions, reducing their number as far as possible. Analysis is treated with fulness, and a chapter is devoted to essay-writing.

Messrs. Hutchinson will publish in a few days a novel of modern life entitled 'His Dainty Whim,' by Mr. C. Guise Mitford, the author of 'The Spell of the Snow.'

The Sixty-third Annual General Meeting of the Newsvendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution will be held at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, London, E.C., on Tuesday evening, February 11, 1902. The President, the Rt. Hon. Lord Glenesk, will take the chair at seven o'clock precisely.

The article in The Nineteenth Century and After for December entitled 'The White Peril' has caused a demand for a second edition of 'Letters from John Chinaman,' published by Mr. Brimley Johnson.

Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish next week Monsieur Levasseur's work on 'The American Workman,' which has been issued in America from the press of the Johns Hopkins University. It deals with the industrial progress of the States as shown during the last five decades, and subsequently enters into such vexed questions as 'The Productivity of Labour' and 'Labour Laws and Organisations of Labour.' At a time when the problems of English labour are of such general interest this book should evoke considerable attention.

A second impression of Albert Chevalier's Autobiography, 'Before I Forget,' will be issued by Mr. Fisher Unwin next week.

Messrs. Digby, Long & Co. will publish the following new novels this month: 'A New Messiah,' by Robert Cromie; and 'To-day and To-morrow,' by Eleanor Holmes.

Miss Arabella Kenealy, author of 'A Semi-Detached Marriage,' 'Charming Renée,' &c., will publish shortly, through Messrs. Hutchinson & Co., a new novel entitled 'The Love of Richard Herrick.'

Mr. Brimley Johnson will issue immediately six new volumes in his series of 'Carpet Plays.'

The January 17 No. of the 'Journal of Society of Arts' is quite encouraging. Not only does it record the discovery of very rich deposits of copper in New South Wales, but also the existence and successful working of a large coal mine on the shores of Sydney Harbour, which gives that port a new and unique position, enormously increasing its value and importance from both the commercial and international point of view; it will treble the fighting power of our fleet in Australasian waters.

We have received a catalogue of the valuable collection of works on art, editions de luxe in magnificent bindings, genealogical, heraldic, numismatic, historical, military, and other books, including many French illustrated books, works on costumes, historical pageants and festivities, principally belonging to the collection of the late Count Francis Folliot de Crenneville, which will be sold by auction at Vienna on Monday, February 2, and following days, from 5 to 8 p.m., by Messrs. Gilhofer and Rauschburg, on their own premises, 1 Boguergasse, 2, Mezzanine.

By the acquisition of adjacent property the proprietor of the Rockdale Observer has been enabled to add considerable extensions to the premises in which that paper is produced. There is no part of the country where the competition of the morning and evening papers with the local press is so keen as it is in South Lancashire. The remarkable success of the Observer shows that the proprietors of local journals have nothing to fear from this competition if they will live up to the possibilities of their position.

Another curious entry in the Memorandum Book is as follows:

'1722, Oct. 24. A copy of an agreement for purchasing 250 of the Duke of Buckingham's works—afterwards Jockeyed by Alderman Barker and Tonson together.' A footnote says, 'Who can insure Literary Celebrity? No Bookseller would now regret being Jockeyed out of his Grace's works.'

D'ISRAELI.

Dr. Johnson, in his 'Life of Pope,' says: 'The highest bidder (for Pope's "Homer") was Bernard Lintot, who became proprietor, on condition of supplying, at his own expense, all the copies which were to be delivered to subscribers, or presented to friends, and paying £200 for every volume. . . . The subscribers were 575. The copies for which subscriptions were given were 654. For these copies Pope had nothing to pay; he therefore received, including the £200 a volume, £5,320 without deduction as the books were supplied by Lintot.'

The above entries in the Memorandum Book do not complete the payments if, as Johnson says, Pope received £5,320.

The work proved an immediate success as to numbers of copies sold, but it appears not to have been altogether profitable to Lintot.

Nichols says: 'It is unpleasant to relate that the bookseller, after all his hopes and all his liberality, was, by a very unjust and illegal action, defrauded of his profit.*' An edition of the "Iliad" was printed in Holland in duodecimo, and imported clandestinely for the gratification of those who were impatient to read what they could not yet afford to buy.

This action compelled Lintot to bring out a still cheaper edition, which seems to have had a very large sale, but at a price so low as not to be profitable.

Chas. Knight says: 'Pope gained nearly £3,000 by the "Odyssey," but Lintot was disappointed, and pretended that there was something fraudulent in the agreement, and threatened a suit in Chancery. Pope quarrelled of course with him.'

Presumably this sum of £3,000 means the profits made by Pope on his subscriptions as well as what Lintot paid him.

In the severe frost of January and February, 1715-16, the River Thames was one solid block of ice, and shops of every description were erected on its surface. Lintot seems to have been there.

'In this place Bowyer plies, that's Lintot's stand.'—Dawks's News Letter.

Bernard Lintot, as may be gathered from Pope's description of him must have been of a jovial, sociable nature, not particularly thin-skinned, and mighty shrewd in all the concerns of his business. He soon acquired a competency, and added to his paternal inheritance in Sussex. He seems to have been desirous of tracing the origin of his family, and consulted the custodian of the Earl of Oxford's Heraldic MSS., Mr. Humphrey Wanley, in whose diary was found the following memorandum:—

'Young Mr. Lintot, the Bookseller, came inquiring after arms as belonging to his father, mother, and other relations, who, now it seems want to turn Gentlefolks. I could find none of their names.†

Up to this point, the completion of the publication of Pope's Homer, that is until about 1725, there seems to have been no breach in the friendship of author and publisher, but probably owing to the 'threatened suit in Chancery' their friendship appears to have terminated. In 1727 Pope vented his indignation without mercy in 'The Dunciad.' Lintot and Curll are entered as rivals in the Race 'in honour of the Goddess of Dulness.'

'But lofty Lintot in the circle rose,

"This prize is mine; who 'tempt it are my foes;

With me began this genius and shall end."

He spoke, and who with Lintot shall contend?

Fear held them mute. Alone, untaught to fear,

Stood dauntless Curll; "Behold that rival here!

The race by vigour, not by vaunts is won;

So take the hindmost Hell," he said, "and run."

* This could hardly have been, for the publication. is said to have laid the foundation of Lintot's fortune. —Ed.

† Arms were granted, 1723, to Thos. Lintot of Wadhurst. It does not appear whether he was of the same family as the bookseller.

Swift as a Bard the Bailiff leaves behind,
He left huge Lintot, and outstrip'd the wind.

As when a dab-chick waddles thro' the copse
On feet, on wings, and flies, and wades and hops;

So lab'ring on, with shoulders, hands, and head,
Wide as a windmill all his figure spread,

With arms expanded Bernard rows his state,
And left-legg'd Jacob * seems to emulate.'

Nichols says: 'Undoubtedly at this time Pope had conceived a very ill impression of his quondam Bookseller. His principal delinquency seems to have been that he was a stout man, clumsily made, not a very considerable scholar, and that he filled his shop with rubric posts' [to which, says D.N.B., 'titles of Books in red Letters were affixed. Dr. Young says that Lintot was a great spluttering fellow liable to fits of rage (Spence Anecdotes).] 'Against his benevolence and general moral character there is not an insinuation.'

Soon after this, Bernard relinquished business to his son Henry, and retired to Horsham in Sussex, for which county he was nominated High Sheriff in Nov. 1735; 'an honour which he did not live to enjoy.' He died Feb. 3, 1735-6, at the age of 61. In the newspapers of the day he was styled 'Bernard Lintot, Esq., of the Middle Temple, late an eminent Bookseller in Fleet Street.'

HENRY LINTOT,

the only son of Bernard, was born in 1709; he was admitted to the Freedom of the Company of Stationers by patrimony Sept. 1, 1730. From that time the business was carried on in the joint names of Bernard and Henry, but the father passed the principal part of his time in Sussex. Two days after the death of Bernard, Henry was appointed High Sheriff for that county; he resided at South Water, in the Rape of Bramber, near Horsham. He married, first, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Aubrey, Bart., of Llantrythed, in Glamorganshire, by whom he had an only daughter and heiress, CATHERINE, who was married in 1768 (with a fortune of £45,000) to Captain Henry Fletcher, a Director of the East India Company. Henry Lintot died in 1758.

SAMUEL RICHARDSON purchased a moiety of the Patent of Law Printer in 1760, and carried on that department of business in partnership with Miss CATHERINE LINTOT, to whom he left one of the many memorial rings bequeathed to his friends. After Richardson's death his widow and Miss Lintot were for some time joint patentees.

GERMAN DUTY ON BOUND BOOKS.

The proposed duty of 30 marks per 100 kilograms on bound books, says the Berlin correspondent of the Times, is severely criticised, even by the bookbinders, who would, it was expected, be in favour of it. It is pointed out that the estimated revenue from this source, 80,000 marks (£4,000), annually, is very small, while the loss to the book trade will be inevitably heavy.

Germany has more to lose than to gain by the taxation of imported books. In 1900 she exported 14,058 tons of books and music, and imported less than 5,000 tons.

'CHRISTIAN CIVILISATION' AND THE 'ART OF WAR.'

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—I noted an expression in your leading article in this week's issue of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR which, I presume, was not sufficiently weighed before use, or could hardly have been uttered by the editor of a professedly literary paper. I allude to the paragraph towards the end of your article, in which you speak in the same breath of Christian Civilisation and general education in the art of war. Had you said Pagan or Heathen Civilisation I could not have taken exception to the sentence, but surely Christian is a term which it is impossible to apply to a civilisation which directly disobeys the most vital of Christ's precepts. Christian Civilisation and the art of war can never flourish together.

Yours faithfully,

GEO. M. BENINGTON.

Liverpool: January 18, 1902.

[What we said was that it was not flattering to nearly 2,000 years of Christian civilisation that if the British Empire wants to continue to exist it must be prepared to defend itself. If our correspondent is correct in supposing that 'Christian civilisation and the art of war can never flourish together,' then all we can say is that it is a very blue look-out for Christian civilisation.—ED. CANADIAN COPYRIGHT QUESTIONS.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—Since addressing you on the 20th of December last a meeting of the Wholesale Booksellers' and Stationers' Section and Allied Trades has been held, at which attention was directed to the article which appeared in the valued columns of your issue of December 7, being a verbatim copy of a statement which appeared in the Toronto Evening News of November 21, and which purported to be a true report of a meeting of the Section held on that date: though the article in question was printed before the meeting was held, and papers containing it were for sale on the street while the meeting was in progress.

No discussion whatever was had at this meeting relative to 'Copyright' other than the passing of a resolution asking a Committee to bring down a report as to their interview with the Government at Ottawa.

No member spoke 'advocating a change in the Copyright Law,' and therefore Mr. Morang 'combated no arguments of the publishers in a vigorous manner' that afternoon. Mr. Morang stated that he had given an interview to a reporter under the impression that 'Copyright' and not 'Transportation' was to be discussed at this meeting, as he was prepared, if the question of 'Copyright' came up, to offer a resolution which he read. This resolution was not seconded, was not even considered, and was not therefore 'promptly voted down.'

The statement in question is therefore not only absolutely false but most malicious, and it must be evident to all fair-minded men that it had but one object in view, viz. to deceive and injure.

And I have further to state that, notwithstanding Mr. Morang, who was present at the meeting, knew that the statement he had given to the Evening News was wholly without foundation, he made no effort whatever to retract, but on the contrary, actually, as I am informed, caused marked copies of the untruthful report, of which he was the author, to be sent to both English and American publishers, and perhaps I am right in assuming that you also were the recipient of this favour.

I am, dear Sir,

Yours truly,

EDGAR A. WILLS,

Secretary-Treasurer.

'AN IN-BOARDED BOOK.'

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—As some of my fellow-booksellers may not know, any more than I did, the exact meaning of this technical term, it may be of advantage if I give the substance of a letter I have just received from Mr. Frowde, of the Oxford University Press.

Regarding the style of working an "in-boarded" book, all the work is done singly in this process, and takes much longer time, but the advantage is its strength in the sewing and fixing in the covers, the thread being sewn through the sheets, is passed over a thick hemp cord at the back, and the ends of this cord are drawn into the boards of the book before the leather is put on, hence an extra cost. In the case of the cheaper book the leaves have to be sewn out at the back, making a hole to allow thin strings to be inserted, and the thread sewing is passed over them, leaving the back square with the fore-edge, and this has to be forced and greatly strained to make the round-shaped back, whereas in the former sewing it leaves the back wedge-shape, and this, by beating the fore-edge, naturally takes a rounded back without any strain whatever.

'The "in-boarded" book is, without doubt, the best way of binding best or heavy books, as it is almost impossible to take the sheets out of the cover again.'

Yours, &c.,

CHURCH BOOKSELLER, MANCHESTER.

[We think Mr. Frowde's statement that in-board work means sewing on bands is not quite correct, as will be seen from the following note from Mr. Zaehnsdorf, the well-known binder and author of the text-book on binding, published by Messrs. Geo. Bell & Sons.—ED. P. C.]

Jan. 15, 1902.

'The description you send me of an in-boarded book is not exactly what is understood in the trade. At one time the distinction was simply between cloth work and board work, the one being called "in-board" work, and the other one "cased"; but at the present time there is so much cheap work flung upon the market that again the distinction has arisen with the better bound books, and when a forwarder applies for work and says he does "in-board work," it means that his book is cut by the plough after the boards have been attached to the book. "Out-of-boards" means that the book is trimmed or cut all round with the guillotine and the boards attached afterwards. Bible work, for instance, is done "out-of-boards"; the book is forwarded, the edges gilt, and the cases made of the leather, and the only hold that the cover has to the book is the glue that is put upon the back of it.

'Mr. Frowde's statement that in-board work means sewing on bands is not in the usual sense correct. Of late years a good many things are called by an entirely different name to what they were previously known by; in fact, anything seems to be right so long as the public can be gulled a little bit; for instance, a good many books put upon the market are described as being bound in French morocco; this is very often sheepskin; those who know better know that French morocco is understood to be the best Levant morocco, and it is dyed and dressed in France, although the leather may have been bought in the English market. I can show you this if you will take the trouble to come round, and I should like to wrestle with you on your question of lettering up backs, because I do not agree with you; this question was settled long ago, and it is rather amusing to see it crop up again, as it did in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR a short time ago; but still one must be amused with something these hard times.'

A BINDER'S GRIEVANCE.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—Owing to the vast amount of stock that we are warehousing for our customers we respectfully beg to call your attention to the fact that many printers do not, as was the general recognised custom amongst them, send in your sheet stock collated and packed in bundles of say 50 or 100 perfect copies, with the result that when orders are given for less than the whole edition a considerable delay must of necessity occur in opening the bundles and counting off the required number of sheets to be bound, and apart from this there is great risk of spoilage. Having regard to these facts, we earnestly solicit your kind support in instructing your printers in future to deliver your stock collated in parcels of either 50 or more perfect copies, according to the size of the volume.

Yours faithfully,

THREE-COLOUR PRINTING CAN BE DONE, AND WELL DONE, IN ENGLAND.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—We notice in your last issue an interview with Messrs. Hutchinson & Co., in the course of which mention is made of the three-colour process of illustration. We were surprised to read that this firm had been unable to place their orders for three-colour illustrations in England. We have recently produced the whole of the illustrations for Mr. Mortimer Menpes' two works, 'Japan' and 'War Impressions,' Mr. Marcus Huish's 'Samplers and Needlework,' the souvenir of 'Twelfth Night' at Her Majesty's Theatre, all of which have secured from the leading papers of the United Kingdom universal praise. For many houses in the front rank of the publishing world the Hentschel-Colourtype Company has carried out extensive orders which have given every satisfaction, not only to the artists whose originals have been faithfully reproduced, but also to the publishers and the reading public.

We regret that Messrs. Hutchinson should have seemed in any way to imply that British firms were not fully awake to the new developments in the illustration of books. As a matter of fact, books with illustrations reproduced by our process have been published nearly every week throughout the autumn publishing season.

We trust you will be able to find room for this short defence of English work, for we feel convinced there is no reason why three-colour work should be sent to France.

We enclose you a few specimens which may interest you.

We remain,

Yours faithfully,

SUPPLY OF BOOKS TO PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—There is a class of booksellers who do a great deal of business for no profit, and very often at a loss, and my object in writing is to call the attention of these booksellers to a possible way out of this situation. I refer to Public (not Primary) School Booksellers, who, giving full discount, only receive sale price and settlement discount, and certain odd books. Now if the settlement discount is only 2½ per cent., and the working expenses are the average, say 12 per cent., there is a positive loss on all his trade. The odd books are generally on the shelves, and as to the myth of an extra discount on traveller's journey, what 'term orders' can be given exactly when a traveller arrives? And giving orders in advance in these days of constant change (new masters with their own books &c.) is certain to result in loss. One way out of this loss is not to stock any books of the firms who compel us to so trade at a loss. If the trade would all act in this way, matters would soon right themselves; but booksellers of late years have been so used to seeing their brethren 'make assignments' or call in the Official Receiver that they submit to trade in books at a loss, trying to make up on other goods. Will the Booksellers' Association take up this matter, and ask their members to act on this suggestion and secure an honest working profit?

A CORRECTION.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—I intended writing before to point out to you that in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR of January 11 you gave the price of Emery's 'Bacteriological Diagnosis' as 5s. 6d. net; it is 5s. 6d. usual. Kindly correct the error, and if possible notify same, as orders have come as though net.

By an oversight you were not told of this error earlier in the week.

NOT TOO MODEST.

The business methods of publishers came up for discussion at a recent literary gathering. William Dean Howells and Mark Twain were present.

'The spirit of the age is strenuous,' said Mr. Howells. 'And in order not to be behind the times the publishers modify the verbiage of the circus poster with scant politeness.'

'They do,' assented the humourist. 'My publisher speaks of advertising my next book as a story by Mark Twain with no further comment. But he shan't make a holy show of me with his vulgar advertising simplicity. I shall insist upon a street parade at the very least, because I am a modest man and dislike to be made conspicuous.'—New York Times.

'TO TEACH THE YOUNG IDEA HOW TO SHOOT.'

We are glad to say that our article on this subject in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR last week (Jan. 18) has been most favourably received by schoolmasters.

Also that the War Office had anticipated to some extent our suggestion that help might be given by it to those schools and colleges which encourage boys to learn to use the rifle. The following correspondence is from the Times of January 22, 1902:—

MILITARY TRAINING FOR BOYS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE 'TIMES.'

SIR,—In his letter of January 4, 1902 (quoted by Lord Meath in his letter which appeared in the Times of the 16th inst.), Mr. Brodrick referred to 'the procuring of ammunition by cadet corps under the conditions given on the enclosed paper.' It did not seem quite clear from the enclosure whether this ammunition would be issued free or on payment to cadets.

The following letter from Mr. Brodrick has been received by the Lads' Drill Association in answer to an inquiry on this point:—

Dear Lord Meath,—I am sorry if there was any ambiguity in my letter of the 4th inst. The issues of ball, blank, and aiming tube ammunition to cadet corps, to which I referred, are to be free—60 rounds of ball and 30 of blank in the case of corps having the use of an approved rifle range of not less than 300 yards, and 80 of aiming tube and 30 of blank in the case of corps having an approved shooting gallery or miniature range. These issues will be made for each member of the corps who is of sufficient age to perform rifle or miniature target practice shown on the strength of the corps on the 1st November preceding.

These issues will be extended on similar terms to cadet battalions.

Yours very truly,

ST. JOHN BRODRICK.

Unquestionably this is a great concession on the part of the War Office, and will be a great encouragement to those who advocate the military training of our lads. The value of the concession does not consist merely in the monetary value of the ammunition, but in the fact that by this concession the military authorities at last recognise that the military training of our lads is a matter of national importance and one that deserves the serious attention of those responsible for the defence of the Empire.

Mr. Brodrick is to be congratulated on being the first Secretary of State for War who has realised this truth.

I write this letter on behalf of our chairman, Lord Meath, who is abroad.

Yours faithfully,

FRANKFORT, Vice-President, Lads' Drill Association.

JOHN WESLEY'S JOURNAL.

One of the most interesting articles in the *Church Quarterly Review for this month is an appreciative notice of John Wesley's 'Journal.' 'To the reader of mature age the book is one of interest and even of fascination. It is the record of the unwearied activity and beneficence of the busiest man that modern times have seen.' The writer points out how strangely neglected Wesley's 'Journal' has been even by Wesleyans.

Another prominent article is 'The Mycenaean Age,' as illustrated by recent archaeological discoveries.

MORE CHEAP CRITICISM OF THINGS BRITISH.

This is from the 'Daily Mail.'

ENGLISH BOOKS SAID TO LOOK CHEAP AND VULGAR.

Some of the most famous authors of the day have suddenly risen in arms against the quality of British book printing and production, which is variously described as 'cheap,' 'shoddy,' 'vulgar,' and 'very decadent.'

Mr. George Bernard Shaw leads off the grumble in the new number of the Caxton Magazine, in which he says that 'many fashionable books show that the printer has not only not known the first canon of his art, but that he has actually gone out of his way to introduce leads and spacings wherever he can. Well-printed books are just as scarce as well-written ones, and every author should remember that the most costly books in the world derive their value from the craft of the printer, and not from the genius of the author.'

Mr. H. G. Wells says: 'I must confess I don't think much of contemporary book production. Modern type to Pickering type is as treacle to good wine.'

Mr. Gilbert Parker, M.P., thinks that book-binding is far more artistic, original, and tasteful in the United States than in England, but that the printing is better here than in America. Mr. Eden Phillpotts complains that his books are always dead and flat and tame in their English covers, and nearly always bright and attractive as bound and produced in America. Mr. I. Zangwill declares that there are some new books properly printed, 'because their authors give a special order therefor. But the majority can only be described as shoddy;' and Mr. Morley Roberts does not think anything bad enough can be said of the ordinary bindings of books, and refuses to try.

Almost the only good* word that is spoken for the modern book comes from two eminent lady writers—'John Oliver Hobbes' and Mrs. L. T. Meade.—[* We should have said 'sensible.'—ED. P. C.]

THE YEAR'S ART AND DIRECTORY OF ARTISTS, 1902.

Messrs. H. Virtue & Co., Limited, Henrietta Street, send us the new issue of their most useful little work, 'The Year's Art,' now in its twenty-third year, with excellent portraits of leading artists.

The series of portraits in the present volume comprises those of painters who are representative of the art of portraiture. In his Introduction Mr. A. C. R. Carter, the editor, says: 'There can be no doubt that Mr. G. F. Watts, R.A., is, and will be, honoured as one of the greatest painters of the age, and the series affords an opportunity of placing his portrait as the frontispiece to this volume. Born on February 23, 1817, he retains his powers, as a second Titian, and the two portraits lately exhibited at the Society of Portrait Painters were executed in 1901, although some critics, deceived by their astonishing force, conjectured that they were earlier works. Although the art sales of the year generally suffered by comparison with those of former years, there were many remarkable features. The enormous prices obtained for old mezzotint engravings in the Blyth Sale will long be quoted, and on pp. 281-8 the chief of these are duly set forth.

With reference to the art history of the year care has again been taken to chronicle the chief facts.

WHY BRITISH MAGAZINES DO NOT CIRCULATE IN CANADA.

One of the British correspondents accompanying the royal party to Canada referred in one of his letters to the prevalence of United States magazines and newspapers in this country and the almost entire absence of the British publications. We trust that his observations in this matter will reach the ear of the British Government, and especially the British Post Office Department. The scarcity of the British newspapers and magazines in Canada is owing more than anything else to the excessive postal rates charged on papers and periodicals. Canada has a reciprocity treaty, as it were, with the United States for the handling of mail matter. We accept free at the border all matter coming from the United States. But the deal is not a fair one for Canada. Perhaps fifty times more papers and magazines come into Canada from the United States than pass the other way. The convention between the two Post Office Departments is altogether in favour of the United States. If a similar convention cannot be established between Great Britain and Canada, something at least ought to be done to stimulate the interchange of the periodicals and newspapers between the Mother Country and her leading colony. The substitution of the English magazines for those from the United States would be a commendable change, while the circulation of the Canadian papers in Great Britain, especially between emigrants in Canada and their friends in the Old Country, would prove an effective emigration medium. A cheap newspaper rate is of even greater importance for the unification of the Empire than Imperial penny postage as applied to letters. The former would appeal to a much larger constituency than the latter. The question is ripe for action.—Toronto World.

THOS. H. PEASE & SON, OF NEW HAVEN, U.S.A.

After an active life of almost sixty years, the news and bookstore conducted by the late Thomas H. Pease and his son, Salmon G. Pease, is to be reorganised as the Pease-Lewis Co. Mr. Pease is to retire. He will no longer take an active part in the store carried on since 1842. To the older residents of New Haven the announcement doubtless will come as a surprise, for the name of Pease has been connected with newspapers and books ever since the establishment of the 'College Book Store' in 1842.

'PAPER FLOWERS.'

This little book, one of the 'Useful Arts' series, written by S. Procter and Hallton East, and published by Dawbarn & Ward, will be very useful to all who wish to know how to make paper flowers.

It gives full instructions and is well illustrated by plates, showing all the different processes which have to be gone through in the manufacture. The last few pages show how to make many other useful articles with paper, such as lamp-shades, baskets, boxes, tidies, and small dolls; and will be found very suggestive to those who are working for bazaars.

BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

At the last monthly meeting of the Board, Mr. C. J. Longman in the chair, the sum of £106. 8s. 4d. was voted for the relief of 56 members and widows of members.

THE UNDERGROUND WATERING OF PLANTS AND GARDENS.

'The Underground Watering of Plants and Gardens' is the title of a little book, by John Grant, for gardeners or people who are interested in the management of flowers. It is published by Messrs. Ward & Lock.

It describes fully the way plants should be watered so that the water reaches the roots. It also has chapters on the 'Culture and Propagation of Rose Trees,' which should prove of great use to amateur gardeners.

A principal aim of the author is to stop the enormous waste of water, which partly leads to water famines among the poorer populations in dry seasons.

How often one sees a gardener pouring streams of water on to a bed and allowing it all to run away down a path. Mr. Grant's plan provides for utilising all the water, under the surface at the roots.

Notices of Books.

From Mr. George Allen.—'The Living Rulers of Mankind,' by the Rev. H. N. Hutchinson, B.A., F.G.S. Part IV. With the present instalment of this highly creditable work we are introduced to the section of 'Germany,' and portraits are given, among many others, of the German Emperor, the late Empress Frederick, with her sons and daughters, the German Empress, the Crown Prince Frederick William, Duke Frederick of Anhalt, Prince Leopold of Hohenzollern, the Grand Duke of Hesse, King Otto I. of Bavaria, the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, the Grand Duke of Baden, The King of Württemberg, the King of Saxony, and Luitpold, Prince Regent of Bavaria. The publication thoroughly maintains the extreme excellence of its opening number, and from every point of view is entitled to the warmest commendation.

From Messrs. Allman & Son, Limited.—'Preparatory German Lessons,' by S. E. Bally. The conspicuous clearness of this little volume and its freedom from anything like confusing instructions are bound to render it a favourite with the teachers of elementary classes. The chief object in the preparation of the work has been conversation, and bearing this end in view the words in the reading lessons have been divided into syllables, the accented syllables clearly pointed out, and pieces of poetry (Volkslieder), intended to be committed to memory, added to the text. The beginner in German may be warmly advised to avail himself of Mr. Bally's little book.

From Messrs. A. & C. Black.—'Grands Prosateurs du Dix-Septième Siècle,' edited by Louis Brandin; 'Les Aventures de Chicot (1580),' par Alexandre Dumas, edited by A. R. Florian, M.A. Both these volumes have been prepared for use as Elementary French Readers in schools, and for this purpose they are well adapted. In selecting from the writings of Bossuet, Pascal, Fénelon, and Descartes, Professor Brandin has been careful to choose pieces that are complete in themselves, and are not merely fragments illustrating the style of a writer or period. The volume is completed with a portion of the letters of Madame de Sévigné, and the maxims and portraits of La Rochefoucauld and La Bruyère. A short account of the life and writings of each of these prosateurs will be found at the head of the notes, and portraits are also given. 'The Aventures de Chicot' are of course drawn from Dumas' 'Quarante-cinq,' and the book is concerned with what befell the celebrated jester on his way from the Court of Henry III. of France to that of Henry of Navarre, afterwards Henry IV., and with the attack of the latter upon the fortified town of Cahors. In an appendix there is given a graphic account of the taking of Cahors, from the pen of an eye-witness, the Duke of Sully, and this is followed by the summary of the narratives of two other contemporary writers. The book also contains some serviceable notes, a table of irregular verbs, an excellent vocabulary, and several illustrations. To each volume Mr. F. B. Kirkman, the general editor of the series, contributes a preface.

From Messrs. Blackie & Son, Limited.—'King Richard III.,' with introduction and notes by F. E. Webb, M.A. This is a further volume in Messrs. Blackie's excellent 'Junior School Shakespeare.' The book has evidently been prepared with great care, and is particularly well equipped with notes. In the introduction the date of the play, the source of its plot, its historical accuracy, and other matters are considered. There is also a classified index of allusions, points of grammar and style, puns, derivations, familiar expressions, and passages that should be committed to memory. As a manual for school use we know of few works that can compare with it.—Messrs. Blackie have also sent us 'Macbeth' and 'Henry V.' their latest issues in 'The Picture Shakespeare.' Though of a larger size and type than the 'Junior School Shakespeare,' the notes and appendices in this edition are substantially the same. Both notes and text, however, have been revised by practical teachers in order to secure entire suitability for class use, and more particularly to render the books serviceable for candidates for the College of Preceptors and Junior Local Examinations. The illustrations naturally form a conspicuous feature of the edition, and those to 'Macbeth' and 'Henry V.' are without exception remarkably good.

From the same.—'Brush Drawing: a Handbook for Teachers and Students,' by J. W. Nicol. Mr. Nicol's work is mainly intended for the assistance of the elementary school teacher who must be acquainted with and teach a large number of subjects and who does not claim to be an expert in drawing. A feature of the book is that the use of the pencil is not entirely discouraged. It should not be used largely, says the author, but in many instances its presence is better than its absence. There are over sixty plates in the volume, containing several hundred designs. They are mostly printed in green, because plant life is the source from which the majority of the drawings have been derived, and green is less trying to the eyes than many other colours. These examples are accompanied by suggestions regarding their use, and they are further supplemented by some observations on the laws of ornaments, 'which though well known to the more advanced art students are probably not familiar to many teachers and scholars of elementary schools.' In his introduction to the book, Mr. Nicol, after giving some instructions as to the methods to be followed, rather humorously, but none the less logically, pleads for a freer exercise of the beginner's powers. Infants and young children, he points out, will naturally put a good deal of colour on their hands, on the desks, and on parts of the paper where none is expected or required. Better, however, that the child should do this than that its progress should be retarded by a spirit of exacting cleanliness. In its mishaps it may see the way to future success, whereas if the mind is perpetually fixed on the necessity for keeping the exercise book scrupulously clean and tidy, without erasure of any kind, there is a fear that the principal object of the lesson may be entirely lost.

From Messrs. Burns & Oates.—'A Flower of Asia: an Indian Story,' by Cyril. If this be a first essay in fiction, as from the title-page it would seem, the author is to be congratulated on the aptitude he shows for the work. The story in point of construction might be improved upon, but it is distinguished by such a light-hearted humour and interest of character portrayal that the reader will readily overlook any deficiencies of plot in the pleasure of being so delightfully entertained. The most prominent character is one Septimus O'Dowd, an Irish apothecary of a particularly volatile disposition, whose ways at first are a little reminiscent of Mr. Bob Sawyer, though he afterwards develops more gravity of manner. This good gentleman has set up in Calcutta as a qualified physician and surgeon, but at the time we make his acquaintance his stock-in-trade consists only of scented soap, the remainder having, figuratively speaking, been eaten to sustain life. The account of his love passages with Miss Ada Phlick, the romantic lady on the opposite side of the way, is richly humorous. The story, however, has a serious as well as an amusing aspect, and it is here we think where the author makes a mistake. Religious discussions are excellent in their place, but when introduced into the pages of fiction they are apt to prove cumbersome, and to retard the progress of the narrative. Cyril should more deftly have concealed the lesson that the story is intended to convey.

From the same.—'The Catholic Directory, Ecclesiastical Register and Almanac for 1902.' This is the sixty-fifth annual appearance of this useful and well-arranged Directory, which is indispensable to all wishing for information about Roman Catholic matters.

From Messrs. Cassell & Company, Limited.—'Blackboard Drawing: Some Hints on Sketching Natural Forms,' by W. E. Sparkes. The importance of the blackboard in the work of education can scarcely be over-estimated. Its adroit use by the teacher is of the utmost advantage. In this volume Mr. Sparkes offers many valuable suggestions as to the way in which general subjects, such as History, Geography, and Natural Science, can be made interesting by this means. The author writes from a long practical acquaintance with his subject, and his opinions are entitled to every respect. Equally in the matter of its contents and the admirable manner in which they have been presented his volume is worthy of wide attention. There are no less than fifty-two full-page illustrations, embracing as many as three hundred and forty-five figures, and these are not only most skilfully drawn, but have been reproduced with great finish.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'Love, Courtship, and Marriage,' by the Rev. E. J. Hardy. The popular author of 'How to be Happy though Married' once more enters the lists as a champion of matrimony in a new and attractive volume of essays and stories. The first nine of the eleven chapters of which the book consists deal with as many different but equally interesting topics. That on 'Love's Young Dream' contains many instances of men who have been made by marriage. Some excellent advice is given on 'Choice in Marriage,' and capital stories are told of Proposing; while of the 'First Year of Married Life' sad and serious tales are told. The 'Wedding and the Honeymoon' afford several funny tales. Then we are told of people who are married, yet in love; anent which is quoted Benjamin Franklin's proverb, the truth of which he himself experienced: There are three faithful friends—an old wife, an old dog, and ready money. One very sensible chapter is headed, 'I can't afford to marry.' The last two chapters consist of two stories, 'Love and Monte Carlo,' which has a tragic ending, and a more cheery tale, 'A "Tommy" Idyll.' The book is full of sound advice and good humour, and its perusal is calculated to make the reader a wiser and better man.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'A Tale of Two Cities,' by Charles Dickens. Although Mr. Walter Jerrold tells us in his interesting biographical note, prefixed to this beautifully produced edition, that when writing to a French friend, at about the time he was finishing 'A Tale of Two Cities,' Charles Dickens said, 'I hope it is the best story I have written,' it is not generally considered as one of his best productions. When it first appeared the Saturday Review said it bore the same relation to Dickens's other stories as 'Castle Dangerous' did to the rest of the Waverley Novels. It is of the stage, and smells of the footlights. Nevertheless, it might have made the fortune of many another writer. Certainly it loses nothing in the dainty dress in which Messrs. Dent have clothed it; and, much as we liked Phiz at his best, the frontispiece by L. M. Fisher to this edition is better than any one of H. K. Browne's eighteen designs to the original issue in parts. So unsatisfactory were they in the author's opinion that he never again employed the illustrator who had done so much good work for Boz.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'Love's Crossways,' by Mrs. A. M. Diehl. It certainly seems rather extraordinary for a Prussian Prince to be masquerading as a dancing master or prefect of games at a young ladies' college near London, but much no doubt may be allowed the writer of fiction in these days, when original matter is so difficult to come by. But when the same Prince appears at a fancy dress ball in the character of Hamlet, and by a species of magnetic influence terrorises the object of his adoration into an affection for him, afterwards again appearing as the distraught heir to Denmark's throne in private life, matters become a little too extravagant even for the most romantic and inexperienced of readers. Mrs. Diehl would seem to have gone out of her way in this novel to depict eccentric character. With the solitary exception, perhaps, of Miss Poyntz, the warden of the aforementioned college, her creations all seem to be marked by the signs of incipient insanity, and their language, it may be said, is quite in conformity with the impression they arouse. Mrs. Diehl, we know from her previous novels, can accomplish much better work than this, and she may be counselled to curb her exuberant fancy within the bounds of actual, or something like actual, life.

From Mr. Henry J. Drane.—'Ardnarigh,' by Melville Gray. This is a novel, the author tells us, 'drawn from real life.' The incidents are for the most part exceedingly ordinary, and to this extent the description may be pronounced true. The story opens on the estate of Ardnarigh, near Killarney, the home of a retired English officer, Colonel Maupy, and his tender-hearted, winsome daughter, Doris. The Colonel is called upon for military service in South Africa, and departs for the seat of war, leaving Doris in charge of friends in London. Previous to this, however, she has made the acquaintance of an attractive young gentleman who for some reason seems to have incurred the Colonel's hearty dislike. She is sitting in a wood, sobbing over her father's approaching departure, when the young man by his sudden appearance startles her, she hurriedly rises from the ground and sprains her ankle, and further introduction is unnecessary. From this chance meeting various complications arise. Such are the preliminary events in Mr. Gray's story, and if they never lead to anything that can truthfully be called exciting, there is yet much in the narrative that will please the less exacting order of readers.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'Comments of a Countess.' There is much 'smart' flippant criticism on social and other topics in this volume which, though randomly aimed, occasionally hits the mark and is amusing. But the reading world, we surmise, is becoming a little overstocked with clever, irreverent chatter, and a very modest helping of this sort of fare soon jades the appetite. The Countess, however, has her good moments, and taken in snatches, so to speak, will prove an entertaining companion. For this reason we should think her comments are better adapted for the columns of a weekly newspaper (where they originally appeared) than book form. Among the subjects treated of are: 'Theatricals,' 'The Season,' 'Charity,' 'Music,' 'Entertaining,' 'Dress,' 'Relations and District Visiting,' 'Ascot,' 'Rest Cures,' 'Cricket,' 'Cows,' 'House-Parties,' 'Ireland,' 'Guests,' 'Ancestors,' and 'The Degeneration of Man.' From the enumeration of these titles the reader may gain a very fair idea of the scope of the volume. On the whole, we are of the same opinion as the gentleman who said that he thought the authoress gave 'a totally wrong impression of society to people who take their views of it from the papers,' and we look upon her answer to this charge as simply a piece of special pleading. But for this see the book itself.

From Messrs. Freemantle & Co.—'Love and Life behind the Purdah,' by Cornelia Sorabji, with an Introductory Note by the Marchioness of Dufferin and Ava and a Letter to the Author from the Right Hon. Lord Hobhouse, K.C.S.I. They are highly interesting, these stories of Indian life, principally by reason of the author's thorough acquaintance with the types and observances she depicts. Many of them illustrate in an extremely touching fashion the peculiar tenderness of Indian women, and the supreme unselfishness, amounting to self-sacrifice, with which they will devote themselves to the happiness of their husbands or children. In 'Greater Love,' for instance, Matthri Shri, the childless wife of the oft-times brutal Nano, heroically effaces herself that he may find happiness in the society of another woman, and retiring to a cave in the mountains, lives a life of complete solitude, happy in the consciousness that Nano has now all he desires; while 'The Pestilence of Noonday' tells of a young girl who for nine long years remains true in thought and deed to a self-satisfied, arrogant husband who has left her with words of contemptuous condescension on his tongue, and who loses her own life by the dreaded plague in the effort to shield her child and husband's aged father. Lord Hobhouse's letter, it may be mentioned, has reference chiefly to the difficulties produced by the seclusion of superior women in India where legal matters are concerned.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'V.R.I.: Queen Victoria, her Life and Empire,' by the Marquis of Lorne (now His Grace the Duke of Argyll), illustrated. So much was known, because so much was published during her lifetime, of our late good and great Queen, and so much has been written and published about her since she was taken from her sorrowing people, that it was no light task the present Duke of Argyll undertook, that of writing yet another account of her life and empire. However, his Grace possessed special qualifications for the work which are patent to everyone; and no one who takes this book in hand will lay it down without feeling the better and the brighter for reading it. We come upon many a charming story of the late Queen's private life, both before and after she succeeded to the throne, that had not hitherto been known to us, and there is not a line one would wish omitted. One passage in the preface, however, we read with regret. Here it is: 'I had collected many interesting letters from men of mark telling of the great event of the hour, and had intended in this volume to give those speaking of days which have passed fifty years ago. But space defies the attempt; they are left aside, illustrative and interesting as many are.' The illustrations, thirty-two in number, are most judiciously selected and very beautiful. It is a handsome book, and one well suited for school or birthday presentation.

From Mr. R. Brimley Johnson.—'Twixt Dog and Wolf,' by C. F. Keary. For those who like stories of the weird and supernatural this volume will have great fascination, but for our own part the world has sufficient horrors of its own for us to go out of our way to cultivate the 'creeps.' It must, however, be admitted that in this particular province of fiction Mr. Keary exercises a wonderful spell, and those who place themselves under his guidance will certainly have no reason to complain of a lack of sensation. 'Elizabeth,' for instance, the second of the three stories in this volume, is thoroughly impregnated with thrilling superstitious fervour, and will keep the congenial reader in a constant state of open-eyed horror from beginning to end. These three stories occupy about three-quarters of the book; the rest is appropriately enough made up of 'Phantasies.' We have every respect for Mr. Keary and greatly admire his powers, but his influence is distinctly uncanny.

From Mr. John Lane.—'The Queen's Chronicler, and other Poems,' by Stephen Gwynn. The majority of the verses in this volume have been reprinted from weekly or monthly publications. A large number appeared in our contemporary, the Spectator. Mr. Gwynn's muse is characterised by infinite grace and poetic expression. He is alternately grave and gay, but in both humours there is a subtle sympathy with human nature. Perhaps of all his poems we like that on 'Gifford's Grave' best—those fine lines beginning:

Many a hero born and bred
By Irish waters, has worn the red,
Many a soldier wise and good;
But never was bred a nobler brood
Than grew in times of a troubled state
Amid the anguish of 'Ninety Eight,
And wore the blazon without a stain—
The eagle-featured Napier strain,
Wide as the world they spread their praise,
Heroes three in heroic days;
Three names written in living gold—
This is a deed of the second told.

Of the lighter pieces we like 'My Lady Nowadays' and 'Denny,' but indeed all are good, and there is little cause for selection.

From Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co.—'Joy and Strength for the Pilgrim's Day,' selected by the editor of 'Daily Strength for Daily Needs' &c. Readers of 'Daily Strength for Daily Needs' will gladly welcome this new volume of selections made by the same editor, whom we assume to be Mary Wilder Tileston, for that is the name at the foot of the kindly little preface. This selection of thoughts of courage, faith, hope, and love is both eclectic and catholic. For, while the editor has chosen the very best, she has not limited her choice to the writers of one sex or creed or country; but has given beautiful thoughts from writers of both sexes, of various creeds, of many ages and countries; each and all calculated to cheer and hearten the pilgrim on his daily journey through this life to that which is to come. Seldom do we find a book more suitable for presentation at this season of the New Year and Epiphany.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited.—The Connoisseur in its January issue presents as usual a very fascinating series of contents, and its advantages for collectors are markedly apparent as ever. Among the principal articles are 'Lord Cheylesmore's Mezzotints,' by Julia Frankau, with exquisite reproductions of paintings by George Romney, J. M. W. Turner, R.A., Sir Joshua Reynolds, R.A., John Hoppner, R.A., William Beechey, and others; 'The Library of Grolier,' by W. Y. Fletcher, F.S.A., accompanied by many beautiful specimens of bindings; 'Goya, his Times and Portraits,' by S. L. Bensusan; and 'Recently Discovered Portraits of Sir Joshua Reynolds,' by Algernon Graves. The special plates of the number are exceedingly attractive. They embrace mezzotint reproductions of paintings by Sir Joshua Reynolds and John Hoppner, a portrait of Charles IV. of Spain from a picture by Goya, 'Old Q,' by Thomas Rowlandson, from a water-colour drawing, and a portrait of Lord Cheylesmore.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Limited.—'Modern Book-keeping and Accounts,' in three parts, by William Adgie, F.C.A. Part I., Elementary. This handy volume forms part of Hooper and Graham's useful series of 'Modern Manuals of Commerce,' which, while being thoroughly educational when viewed from the standpoint of mental training, is at the same time essentially practical and adapted to business uses. The author insists on the value of a systematic study of Book-keeping and Accounts as part of a commercial education; and points out that the chief difficulty in the conveying of instruction arises from the want among teachers, however able, of the practical acquaintance with this particular work which is possessed by business men. This Elementary Part assumes no knowledge of Account Books on the part of the student, and is so graduated that, aided by the instructions given in the Introduction, the student ought to experience no difficulty in mastering the subject.

From the same.—'Hermann der Cherusker,' von Ferdinand Goebel, edited by J. Esser. The latest addition to that excellent series of educational manuals known as 'Siepmann's Elementary German' series can favourably compare both in choice of subject and treatment with any of its predecessors. The book consists of an introduction, in which some account is given of Ferdinand Goebel and the nature of his work, the text, some twenty pages of notes, an alphabetical list of strong verbs, and a well-prepared vocabulary. In addition, we have the usual appendices by the general editor of the series, Mr. Otto Siepmann, supplying words and phrases for viva-voce drill, sentences on syntax and idioms for viva-voce practice, and passages for translation into German. The entire work is calculated to be of the greatest assistance to those cultivating a knowledge of the German language.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'John Howard,' by Edgar C. S. Gibson, with 12 illustrations. The 20th of January, 1902, will be the one hundred and twelfth anniversary of the death of John Howard, the philanthropist, who spent the last seventeen years of his life in unremitting exertions to ameliorate the condition of those persons confined in prison or on sick beds in hospitals. Howard was born in Hackney, September 26, 1726. His father, being a wealthy and prosperous upholsterer, left him a sufficient income and landed property to lead the life of a country gentleman. So he spent his time in attending to his duties as a kind landlord on his estate at Cardington, near Bedford, until the death of his second wife, and his attendance at the the Bedford Assizes after his appointment as High Sheriff of the county in 1773 called his attention to the grievous wrongs inflicted, not only on convicted persons, but on those pronounced innocent. He discovered that many acquitted prisoners were sent back to prison, and once more confined there, simply because they had not paid the customary fees due to the gaoler and to 'the tipstaff for being taken into custody.' However innocent he might be, such an unlucky being could not possibly regain his liberty until he had first paid the bill for being arrested, put in prison, and lodged there. This state of things Howard was determined to remedy. How he fared in his journeys, not only in England but throughout the United Kingdom and the Continent, and how he died of fever and was buried at Cherson, will be found narrated in this well-told and very interesting life, which is capably illustrated and beautifully printed.

From Messrs. George Newnes, Limited.—'How to Furnish Well and Cheaply,' by Mrs. Alfred Praga. Mrs. Praga has done much in various directions to inculcate a spirit of practical economy among her countrywomen, but we do not think she has ever been seen to such excellent advantage as in this unpretentious little volume. It furnishes sound, experienced advice in regard to the furnishing of a flat, a house, a 'man's den,' a country bungalow, a cottage, and so forth. We, in the first place, take a seven-room flat and furnish it for 100 guineas—which can hardly be called expensive. We then become more ambitious and enter upon the lease of a house—we are glad, by the way, to see that Mrs. Praga has useful advice to offer in regard to agreements—and with 150 pounds in hand boldly set about its upholstery. It is certainly not a large sum, but our 'guide, counsellor, and friend' shows with admirable clearness how the work can be accomplished. And so throughout the remainder of the book; Mrs. Praga is always hopeful, encouraging and distinctly practical. Many people don't care about taking advice, especially young housewives, but if they neglect upon furnishing to seek the assistance of this little book they will undoubtedly be greatly the losers in their undertaking.

From Messrs. W. P. Nimmo, Hay & Mitchell. 'The Robert Browning Year-Book,' compiled by J. R. Tutin, and 'Crowning Mercies: a Birthday Book of Cheering Texts from Holy Scripture,' selected by Mary Donald. Both these little books are excellently adapted for the purpose intended, and in each case the extracts for the various days of the year have been chosen with sound discrimination. In Miss Donald's work the Scripture texts have been supplemented by appropriate hymn verses. Each volume is strongly and attractively bound.

From the Religious Tract Society.—'Side-lights on the Bible: Scripture and Eastern Life illustrated from my Collection of Oriental Curios,' by Mrs. Brightwen. This little volume contains a description of the various objects the authoress has for many years collected from Jerusalem, Damascus, and the East, and it is couched in much the same language she would use when speaking to a group of youthful listeners gathered round her museum table for the first time. In this wise we are told of phylacteries, lattice windows, lamps, mill-stones, Eastern bottles, various forms of writing material, village dwellings, house roofs, horns and veils, Eastern needlework and different kinds of trees and plants—the whole to the accompaniment of frequent illustrations and constant reference to the Bible. The book is very pleasantly and unaffectedly written, and should make a very favourable impression on young readers.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'Concerning some Fools and their Folly,' by Newton Sandars. This melodramatic story relates the chequered fortunes of the Reverend Peter Winch, who lived with his mother in a small cottage, he being curate to the rector of Kidson-with-Marly. Peter's mother was the eldest daughter of Jabez James, a well-to-do farmer, and when she had married the Rev. Charles Winch was thought to have done well for herself; but unfortunately her husband, who only held a small preferment, and was feeble in character and constitution, died two years after their marriage, and left her with an infant son a few months old. Her father received Mrs. Winch and her child into his house, where she ruled him, his house, and farm with an iron hand; and when her boy left school and Mr. James wished him to keep the farm accounts, Mrs. Winch insisted on his becoming a clergyman. Farmer James was very angry, but for peace and quietness' sake, gave way. Peter went to a theological college, was ordained, became a curate, and his grandfather died. Then it appeared that old James, sensible of the folly he believed his daughter had forced him into, had deducted from the money he intended leaving to Mrs. Winch the expenses of her son's education. Still, although the money was hopelessly lost, her son was a clergyman and she was the curate's mother. After all, things might have been worse. But worse was to come. Kitty Crofton, a pretty London actress, appears in the village; and the steady-going curate, who had had a pious horror of young women, is immediately fascinated, and, after a brief courtship, proposes, is accepted, marries, and then! Yes, then many strange things happen, which show how fools suffer for their folly. Mr. Newton Sandars has written a very clever and interesting story, which displays no ordinary knowledge of life in the Church and the world.

From Mr. Walter Scott.—'The Study of Religion,' by Morris Jastrow, jun., Ph.D., Professor in the University of Pennsylvania. The main purpose of this book, the author states, is to develop a proper method in the study of religion, the importance of which science is manifest to every student of the world's history. Dr. Jastrow has divided his book into three parts, headed respectively General Aspects, Special Aspects, and Practical Aspects. The first part begins with the history of the study itself, as emphasising the significance of the historical method in investigating religious phenomena; this is followed by the consideration of the classification of religions, and of the most significant solutions proposed for the problem as to the origin of religion. The second part deals with the several factors involved in the study of religion itself, such as Ethics, Philosophy, Mythology, Psychology, History, and Culture in general. In the third part, treating of the practical aspects of the subject, the chief emphasis is laid on the historical study of religions, and only incidental reference is made to the philosophy and psychology of religions, 'which, as aspects to be taken up by mature minds,' the author thinks, 'not only lie beyond the province of popular study, but also beyond that of collegiate and university work.' A bibliography comprising a wide range of authors who have written on the many branches of knowledge dealt with in this book, and a very carefully compiled index, serve to augment the value of a most conscientiously written work, which the publisher has printed in beautiful and very legible type.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Stops, or How to Punctuate: a Practical Handbook for Writers and Students,' by Paul Allardyce. This is the twelfth impression of a little work which affords useful advice on a subject about which most people know very little. We are afraid that the majority of writers quite disregard the necessity for punctuation, and if their remarks are intended for type place themselves unreservedly in the hands of their printers. The gentleman whose idea of the use of the semicolon was that it should invariably be placed before the conjunction 'and' is not such a rarity in his ignorance as might be supposed. But Mr. Allardyce's little volume is admirably adapted to remove all confusion.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., Ltd.—'The Whirligig,' by Mayne Lindsay. Illustrated by Maurice Greiffenhagen. Francis Bothfield, Esquire, the hero of this animated story, is one of those rare beings a cosmopolitan Englishman, who, having been 'born in Paris, breeched in Vienna, educated at Göttingen, and domiciled for varying periods in half the cities of Europe,' has retained few insular characteristics; and, in fact, has difficulty in convincing people that he is an Englishman. He is described, at the opening of the story, when he is already two and forty, as being 'a frog of a man; clammy to the touch, and uninteresting.' Yet, 'circumstances alter cases,' and change men's character, as in the typical case of Mr. Pickwick; and thus it is that the accidental resemblance of Mr. Bothfield to Count Gottfried von Inke results in the Englishman developing the best qualities associated with the name of Briton and in his passing with credit, although as on a Whirligig, through a series of thrilling adventures in the small principality of Amalia until at last he is rewarded by a happy marriage. To all in search of a well-told story of adventure, which is graphically illustrated by that clever artist Maurice Greiffenhagen, this attractive volume may be recommended.

NEW EDITIONS.—Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Limited, have added to their new and uniform edition of Mr. F. Marion Crawford's novels 'Takisara.'—We are pleased but not surprised to see that 'Thoughts for the Sundays of the Year,' by the Rt. Rev. Handley C. G. Moule, Lord Bishop of Durham, published by the Religious Tract Society, is now in its fourth edition. Three editions were exhausted in a few weeks.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

INDIA

IMPERIAL FEDERATION

BY DAVID McLAREN MORRISON.
(PUBLISHED 1889-90).

With Original Article, Letters, and Press Comments since First Edition was published.

SECOND EDITION, Revised and Enlarged.

WHAT THE PRESS OF INDIA says of

Mr. Morrison's Work:

ENGLISHMAN (21/11/1900).—‘It appears at a very opportune moment, when India, in common with the sister states of the empire, is about to be represented by a body of her troops at the inauguration of the Australian Commonwealth.’

ENGLISHMAN (17/1/1901).—‘“India and Imperial Federation” is attracting a good deal of attention at home.’

INDIAN MIRROR (20/7/1901).—‘We also congratulate Mr. David McLaren Morrison, of this city, on the adoption by the Government of India of his proposal to enrol Indian Princes and their sons in the Army of Imperial Federation. . . . The credit of the idea is wholly due to him. In fact it was he who originated it, and we are sure it will afford him very great pleasure to see his proposal carried out by Lord Curzon's Government. . . . We are deeply beholden to him for his share in the movement.’

ENGLISHMAN (20/7/1901).—‘For the scheme, of which we published a telegraphic summary yesterday, proceeds upon lines almost identical with those which he (Mr. McLaren Morrison) has advocated for at least a dozen years.’

THE HYMNAL COMPANION

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. Bishop E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D. (late of Exeter)

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 800 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—84 Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced

The new musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the ‘Hymnal Companion’ into poor parishes.

IMPERIAL COMPETITION IN JACKSON'S DRAWING COPY BOOKS

This Competition is open to all pupils in public and private schools throughout the British Empire. There are eighteen superior prizes for both Junior and Senior pupils, and, in addition to nearly one hundred other prizes, Certificates of Merit will be awarded to those whose work deserves such recognition. Now that Drawing is a compulsory subject, the opportunity is afforded to pupils in Elementary Schools of winning valuable premiums with a minimum of labour, as there are only three pages of models to each book in the Series.

For Conditions and all Particulars of above Competition, apply to the Publishers.

PRESS OPINIONS.

SIN AND REDEMPTION

OR

WHY DID CHRIST DIE?

Showing from Scripture that CHRIST did not die to expiate the guilt of sin or reconcile God to the Sinner, but in order to reconcile sinners to God, and that the effect of the doctrine of expiation can only be evil.

SECOND EDITION, NOW READY, THOMAS HARDY'S POEMS OF THE PAST AND PRESENT.

Uniform with the Library Edition of his works. Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 6s.; also Special Edition, bound in white and gold, 7s. 6d.

SATURDAY REVIEW.—'Mr. Hardy is a poet, and a profoundly interesting one. . . . Who else could have written this subtle, strangely impressive poem? . . . No such drama has been written in verse since Browning.'

TIMES.—'Those who are willing to go a little way to meet their author will find a rich reward in Mr. Hardy's latest volume. It is full of vivid images and fine thoughts, a book of poems that appeal to the mind more than the ear, and yet will appeal to the ear which can catch and appreciate an unfamiliar measure. Harmonies that are far removed from the placid jingle of popular rhyme.'

ACADEMY.—'We are in the company of a profoundly serious sympathiser with human nature, a disillusioned observer of life. . . . The prominent notes of Mr. Hardy's thought . . . A very beautiful, a very Christian type of Agnosticism that can prompt such a poem. . . . A remarkable book.'

NEW FICTION.

SECOND EDITION READY.

LET NOT MAN PUT ASUNDER.

By BASIL KING.

Crown 8vo.

SPECTATOR.—'There are fewer figures of greater interest to the student of contemporary manners than the modern American woman of fashion, few more interesting problems than her position and future. We have nowhere encountered a more serious, sympathetic, or illuminating study of this interesting type than is given in this novel of Mr. Basil King's. It is hard to imagine that so finished a work is the first venture of its author. . . . the insight, sympathy, and humour displayed in treating a theme of so poignant interest combine to make this quite one of the ablest and significant novels of the year.'

THIRD EDITION READY.

MARY E. WILKINS'S NEW NOVEL (the Author of 'Jerome,' 'Pembroke,' &c.).

THE PORTION OF LABOUR.

Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 6s.

W. L. COURTNEY in DAILY TELEGRAPH.—'Miss Wilkins is a great artist. . . . One of the finest of her works, inspired by a serious purpose, a gigantic impressive theme, . . . Gems of description.'

HEROINES OF FICTION.

By W. D. HOWELLS.

Illustrated by HOWARD CHANDLER CHRISTY, ALBERT STERNER, and others. 2 vols. demy 8vo. cloth gilt, 15s. net.

Among others the heroines of Dickens, Thackeray, George Eliot, Thomas Hardy, Hawthorne, Charlotte Brontë, Anthony Trollope, Henry James, Mary E. Wilkins are criticised and illuminated by Mr. Howells. The volumes include a general criticism of the Author whose heroines are being discussed, a special study of the characters, and an exemplification of the Author's work through some dramatic scene from the book under discussion.

MADAME RÉCAMIER AND HER FRIENDS.

By H. NOEL WILLIAMS.

A FEW COPIES ONLY REMAIN OF THIS WORK, which is limited to 350, signed by the Author, and numbered.

24 Plate Portraits, 8 of which are in Photogravure, demy 4to. cloth extra gilt, 30s. net.

ATHENÆUM.—'Mr. Noel Williams had a subject of almost unrivalled charm, and has done justice to it. . . . We take leave with regret of this very charming volume, knowing how much we have left unnoticed. The portraits of the many celebrities with whom Madame Récamier was connected leave little to be desired, and form a picture gallery of great interest.'

'THE OFFICIAL LIFE OF THE GREAT QUEEN.'—ACADEMY.

V.R.I.: HER LIFE AND EMPIRE.

By the MARQUIS OF LORNE (the Duke of Argyll).

With 32 Full-page Illustrations, Preface, and Index, crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 5s. SECOND EDITION.

MORNING POST.—'The Duke of Argyll's well-written account of Queen Victoria, handsomely illustrated, written in a clear, unaffected style, adorned with many interesting pictures, and printed in excellent type. . . . The sketch of the great Queen is sure to be welcomed by many readers.'

GREAT RELIGIONS OF THE WORLD.

By EMINENT AUTHORITIES.

Among the Authors may be mentioned Sir A. C. LYALL, Member of the Council of the Secretary of State for India, and formerly Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces; T. W. RHYS-DAVIDS, Secretary and Librarian to the Asiatic Society; Sir LEPEL GRIFFIN, K.C.S.; Prof. GILES, LL.D.; and FREDERIC HARRISON.

SECOND EDITION OF SIR MARTIN CONWAY'S

CLIMBING AND EXPLORATION IN THE BOLIVIAN ANDES.

Sir Martin Conway's labours in the field of literature, art, and exploration are too well known to call for particular description, but in this record he has produced perhaps the most important contribution to the literature of mountain-climbing in the Western Hemisphere that has appeared for many years.

Copiously Illustrated from Photographs, with Appendix, Bibliography, and Index. Demy 8vo. cloth gilt, 12s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION OF CAPT. WELLBY'S BOOK ON ABYSSINIA.

'TWIXT SIRDAR AND MENELIK:

An Account of a Year's Expedition from Zella to Cairo through Unknown Abyssinia.

By the late Capt. M. S. WELLBY. Fully Illustrated. Demy 8vo. 16s.

The ATHENÆUM says:—'The description of the practically unknown country through which the traveller passed. . . . the curious account of the "devil workers" of Walamo, and the theory of the Shangkallas that the white men are born of thunder and can cause rain, are full of interest. The book, indeed, is full of interest from many points of view, and is so brightly written that it might be read as a mere tale of adventure.'

'A MAGAZINE OF CLEVERNESS.'

Entertainment—160 large pages of it—bright, varied, and amusing, will be found between the covers of the January number of The Smart Set, which calls itself 'a magazine of cleverness,' and hails from America.*

On the first page we find this picture of a heroine with the most fortuitous concurrence of features we ever came across—even in fiction:—

'Of the four, Victoria Claudel was, perhaps, the most noticeable. As she often said of herself, she was made up of odds and ends. Her small, well-shaped head was set on a full, strong throat. She had very wide shoulders, a tremendous depth of chest, suggestive of great vitality, feet unusually small, and well-formed hands, unexpectedly large. The face that shone out from the shade of a battered campaign hat showed the same irregularity—a short, straight nose, large, oblique gray eyes, and a small, dainty mouth in a strong jaw. The forehead was somewhat high, and from it sprang a great mass of red-black hair. She was not beautiful, but far more than pretty. Vitality, power, vigorous impatience, and ingrained humor seemed to surround her as an atmosphere rings its planet.'

No wonder when the landlord 'looked up at her stately height, at the gold glory of her hair, at the violet fire of her eyes, he—wilted.'

* Messrs. Wm. Dawson & Sons, Ltd., Cannon House, Brems Buildings, supply it.

In an article entitled 'The Advent of Mary Emma' we get an amusing picture of the attempts of an American beauty and her mother to get into the 'smart set' of London.

'The Fessendens had lived handsomely, and no vulgar people had been permitted to cross the threshold of their prosperous home in Thirty-seventh Street. But in her widowhood, and at the inopportune time when economy slipped its lean arm about the buxom waist of extravagance, Mrs. Fessenden found her brain spinning with the delicate yet heady wine of social ambition.'

But in her attempts to scale the social ladder in New York Mrs. Fessenden could not manage to 'catch on,' for it crept out that she 'had been nobody before she became a frantic pusher.'

Frantic pusher will do.

So the Fessendens, mother and daughter, came to London, and it is pleasant to read that they liked it.

'Every hour they remained in London they liked it better. On all sides they heard their own language in what seemed to them the most delightful musical guise. They fell to imitating the intonations of the young women who served them in the shops. Mrs. Fessenden made slower progress than her daughter. Augusta would often give her little lessons in the idiom, improvising sentences that her mother would repeat. Thus, for example:

"'I'm going down into the City as fast as I can, to see a haberdasher and a greengrocer.'

"'You said it dreadfully through the nose that time,' Augusta would now and then affirm. "Try again, mamma, and remember to say 'farst,' not 'fast.' That's better. Now for another trial. I'll copy your next lesson on paper and read it aloud to you as it ought to be spoken."

"'Very well. As you please.'

"'So many thanks, my dear Mrs. Brown,' Augusta recommenced. "I shall need lots of things from the linen draper you recommend. But you tell me that he has no nice stays, and that his lift makes one giddy. Fancy!"

This harmless rubbish, or something resembling it, would not always please Augusta by its mode of repetition. "I should never mistake you for English, mamma," she would lament. And so curiously inert had become Mrs. Fessenden's regard for her own country that she would heave a solemn sigh at this disheartening verdict.'

That 'Fancy' is quite British anyway.

Then we get a description of Mary Emma, an out-West country relation of the Fessendens, who looks them up in London, much to their disgust, for they fear her country style will give them away to their smart London friends—they are expecting a call every minute from young Lord Lowestoft.

'Miss Joyce [that's Emma] was unpinning her neat toque, which completed a tailor-made costume of faultless cut and fit. She was dressed as if the Rue de la Paix had sent her forth equipped for precisely the voyage she had just taken. She looked short beside the tall Augusta, but in reality she was of average height. Her figure had every claim to perfection, but this could by no means be said of her face. The features brimmed with so much merriment and sweetness, however, that one quite forgot their irregularity. Her eyes were large and charming, twin lairs of shadowy violet lights and tiny sparkles like powdery silver, while the infantile rosiness and creaminess of her coloring were past all cavi. These somehow made her a beauty without being one. The wild-flower tints of the English maiden were as distinct from their bloom as the petal of an eglantine from the petal of a camellia.

'She was healthily tired, and went to bed a short time after dinner, of which she partook with languid appetite. "I had a monstrous lunch on the boat," she explained, "and then we perfectly stuffed ourselves, Egbert and I, out of a small hamper that they stuck at us through the window of the Dover cars."

"You'll like Egbert when he comes and calls. He's real pretty too; he's the only pretty man I've ever cared a snap for."

'Augusta and her mother sat and stared forlornly at each other after she had retired.'

Of course the charming and sprightly Mary Emma, who thinks the Tower 'elegant' and the Abbey 'adorable,' captivates the Earl. This is her description of how she declined the offer of a coronet in Regent's Park:

'I felt so grateful to him and so sorry for him that I wanted to kiss him right there, with all the stragglers looking at us, nurses and babies and all. He wouldn't believe me. It wasn't conceit, for he isn't conceited. But I understood; he's never been crossed in anything all his life long. I told him that, and I told him he must face the fact of my not being able to love him as a wife should. But I said more—you know what a chatterbox I am! I couldn't help babbling on. "Look here," I said; "you've got to crush it all down. We'd never get on together—never in this world. I'm Mary Emma Joyce and you're an English earl. Oh, you're democratic enough; I recognise that. But your friends and relations ain't. They think me a kind of curiosity now, and laugh at my fun, for I was born jolly. But if I married you they'd play another tune. They'd come plump out and call me vulgar. And they'd be right—from their point of view. I'm not vulgar in my thoughts, in my spirit, in my principles, or in my practices. But I seem so, looked at from their eyes, and I thoroughly comprehend why I should. And there's no changing me. I'm a leopard that must keep its spots till it dies."

No wonder the Earl fell in love with this 'genuine, new, wake-me-up sort of girl,' so 'immensely refreshing,' as an English 'smart-set' lady called her.

We wish we had space for the rest of the love adventures of Mary Emma and her cousin Augusta.

From 'A Drama in a Dining-room,' we take this gem of 'smart set' description:—

'At some remark of mine she smiled. I have never forgotten that smile. It disclosed a front tooth filled with a diamond.

'The effect was startling and at the same time evocative. I recalled that the arrangement was affectioned in certain sections of South America, and it occurred to me that the lady might be a Brazilian—a supposition that subsequent developments confirmed. Yet that which at the time intrigued me most was her relationship to the young musketeer. I could have sworn that she would never see forty again.'

It makes one feel inclined to follow the example of another of the characters, who 'beckoned a waiter and ordered two Mozambique cocktails.'

Mrs. Harold Marsden requests the pleasure of your presence at the celebration of her divorce from Mr. Harold Marsden,
Wednesday evening, October tenth,
at nine o'clock.

This is a copy of the invitation card which Mr. Harold Marsden found on his solitary library-table when he got home from his club. How the party went off is told in one of the cleverest of the stories in this 'Magazine of Cleverness.' 'Rubbish,' some readers will say; well, harmless rubbish, any way, if we may judge from this, the only number we have seen.

TWO 'SUCCESSFUL NOVELS.'

We have received many communications with reference to our note on this subject. Unless forced to do so, we hope not to have to open our columns to a discussion of the works in question. Many who have read the books entirely agree with our opinion of them, and others who have read them and take a different view will not be convinced by correspondence and the publication of extracts.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Athenæum was exceptionally interesting last week. Two authors went for it bald-headed in its own columns—delightful. Then it announced in its 'Fine Art gossip' that 'a very large Roman cemetery has been discovered near Frankfort. One hundred and fifty graves have already been uncovered.' The Romans must have dug up Alaric after all, and now the Goths are having their revenge.

If it is true that 'whom the gods love die young,' then the gods loved Literature—all except Jupiter, for the 'Thunderer' strangled his own offspring and then sold it to the Academy, in which it is now buried. But though Literature is dead, it yet speaketh—not only in our gloomy-covered but otherwise lively contemporary, but also in the new Literary Supplement of the Times itself.

The Academy having adopted Literature, another and Royal Academy is to be established to look after the sister sciences of Philosophy, History, and Philology. The raison d'être of this new institution is curious if not exactly philosophic. It is difficult to imagine all the world's Academies coming to England uninvited, but whoever invited them overlooked the fact that we have no body of the kind in existence here to receive them.

It certainly would have looked odd if at the 1904 Congress in London the only country sensible enough not to have an Academy was England, so the error is to be put right by Royal Warrant as soon as possible.

Messrs. Methuen are about to publish a narrative of the adventures of a Boer telegraphist of the Orange Free State during the war. It is entitled 'With Steyn and De Wet,' and is by Lieut. Philip Pienaar.

The February number of the Young Man has an interesting 'Chat with Mr. Poultney Bigelow.' Mr. James Scott's article, 'Quaint Life in Thames Mud,' is attractive, and made more so by some capital illustrations by the author.

We hear that Mr. Arthur Waugh will shortly take up an important position in the publishing firm of Messrs. Chapman & Hall. He will have general control, under the Board, of the literary and business affairs of that house, with a seat on the Board of Directors. As may be known, Mr. Waugh has for the past six years been associated with Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co.

Lord Avebury publishes with Messrs. Macmillan a companion work to his 'Scenery of Switzerland,' of even greater general interest, being a study of the 'Scenery of England and the Causes to which it is due.' A simple instance may be taken to show the character of the whole. One chapter discusses from the geologist's standpoint the history of a river, with frequent illustrations from English rivers, made plain to the eye by admirable photographs; then deltas are illustrated by a picture of the outfall of the Aira Beck into Ullswater; a second chapter treats of special circumstances affecting rivers, such as chalk strata, producing swallow holes, illustrated by a view of the point where the Buxton Wye disappears underground; while a third chapter explains generally the English river system. Applying the same method to mountains, lakes, coastline, and the rest, Lord Avebury produces a book which must be of keen interest, not only to the amateur student of science, but to any lover of scenery who likes to understand what he admires.

Weatherby Chesney's new book, which Messrs. Methuen will publish shortly, is entitled 'The Foundered Galleon,' and is a treasure-hunting tale, treated in an original way. There is much adventure and no little humour.

With the February number the Empire Review enters upon the second year of its career. Special effort has been made by the editor, Mr. Kinloch Cooke, to get together an attractive programme for the anniversary issue. 'Sport in West Africa,' by Colonel Sir James Willcocks, K.C.M.G., the popular leader of the Ashanti campaign, is full of exciting anecdote and good sound advice to sportsmen.

A third edition will shortly be issued of Dr. Anton Tien's 'Manual of Colloquial Arabic.' The work comprises a concise grammar, dialogues, and reading lessons, besides a vocabulary and other additions of practical usefulness, such as lists of official titles, of tribal names, and information on the divisions of time, on weights and measures, currency, and commercial, legal, and political terms. It should prove specially useful to travellers, merchants, and military men, and to all who wish to acquire a conversational knowledge of Arabic. The work will be published by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.

Dr. Paget Toynbee has a European reputation as a Dante scholar, and his 'Studies of Dante,' which Messrs. Methuen will publish in a few days, will be of high interest to every student of the great Italian poet.

Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish on Saturday, February 8, the first volume in his new series, 'The First Novel Library.' The author, Miles Amber, has given it the title 'Wistons,' and his story is mainly concerned with the lives of two girls who on their mother's side are of primitive and wild gipsy stock. This novel will be published on the same day in New York by Charles Scribner's Sons and in Toronto by William Briggs.

The current number of the 'Proceedings' of the Anglo-Russian Literary Society contains the lecture on Bodenstedt and Puschkin recently given before the Society by Mr. James Baker at the Imperial Institute. Mr. Baker has some important articles forthcoming in the magazines, inter alia, an Interview with the Chancellor of the Exchequer in Downing Street, which has been secured by the Leisure Hour; a lengthy article in two parts in the 'Heroes of God' series, 'The Struggle at Prague,' Messrs. Cassell are publishing; his article on R. D. Blackmore in the Fortnightly; and an article on 'The Development of Craft Genius,' which will appear in the Studio. His 'Report on Continental Technical Education' brings continual requests for lectures on this subject, or to distribute certificates to successful pupils from varied districts in the United Kingdom; and he has also been asked to revise certain schemes of Technical Education in this country, among others the notable one of the Duchess of Sutherland for the Highlands of Scotland.

Miss Broughton's 'Lavinia' and Miss Simpson's 'Bonnet Conspirators,' the two new serials, are continued in the February Temple Bar, which also contains papers on 'The Persian at Home,' described from personal experience by Mr. Wilfred Sparrow; 'Tennyson as a Sea Poet,' by the Rev. H. C. T. Franklin; and 'The Value of a Vote,' with statistics showing the present inequalities in electoral representation, by Mr. Benjamin Taylor. 'Captain Hatton-legh, D.S.O.,' narrates a wild chase, with tragic results, made in pursuit of a beautiful Russian spy by a member of the Indian Staff Corps, and among other stories and papers there is a study of English peasants from an imaginative side not often visible, entitled 'At Prison Gates.'

In Macmillan's Magazine for February Miss Silberrad concludes her serial story, 'Princess Puck.' To the same number Mr. A. G. Bradley (author of 'North Wales' and 'The Lake District' in the 'Highways and Byways' series) contributes an article 'On the Welsh Marches,' full of antiquarian and historical reference. 'Red Torches and White,' by an anonymous writer, contrasts the influence of the modern literature of realism with that of books treating of nature in the open air; and Mr. H. C. Macdowall has a critical paper on Victor Hugo. 'Did Napoleon mean to invade England?' is another of Mr. David Hannay's studies of the great Emperor; 'National Games and the National Character' compares the codes that govern athletics in America and England; 'For the Honour of his Corps,' by Mr. Hugh Clifford, is a grim story of fighting and carnage in the Boer War; and Mr. A. B. Paterson, in 'The Stampede of the Black Range Cattle,' gives a sketch of cattle-driving in the Backblocks of Queensland, in which the introduction of a motor car produces disastrous results.

Principal Rainy's new book on 'The Ancient Catholic Church' (in the 'International Theological Library') was published by Messrs. T. & T. Clark last Saturday. It embraces the period from the Accession of Trajan to the Fourth General Council, A.D. 98-451.

Messrs. Clark also announce for publication during February an important work on 'Demonic Possession in the New Testament: its Relations, Historical, Medical, and Theological,' by Wm. Menzies Alexander, M.A.,

B.Sc., M.D., &c. It is an entirely original research, not a compilation. The conclusions attained have been reached independently, and are of a novel character. The author (who is at present Lecturer in Church History in Aberdeen United Free Church College) holds 'that they confirm in the highest degree the claim of Christ to be considered the Good Physician and the Revealer of the Father.'

Messrs. A. & C. Black will shortly publish 'The Opportunist' by G. E. Mitton, author of 'A Bachelor Girl in London.'

Considerable interest attaches to the forthcoming publication by Mr. Heinemann of the English translation of the Latin text of the 'Trial and Rehabilitation of Jeanne d'Arc.' This was translated in the forties into French by Quicherat for one of the French learned societies, but has never before been done into English, and it is probably the only instance of a complete biographical record of the greatest historical importance being taken down by evidence on oath. The depositions cover the whole pathetic story of the childhood of the Maid, her military career as commander-in-chief of the French armies, her capture, imprisonment, and death at the stake, as described by eye-witnesses, and it is profoundly interesting to read the comments of contemporaries on her wonderful career, which so deeply affected the history of Europe and determined the destinies of England and France.

Readers of Mr. George Hansby Russell's successful novel 'Under the Sjabok' will be interested in knowing that Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. are about to publish a new novel by that author entitled 'On Commando.' Mr. Russell draws upon his knowledge of the people and country of South Africa for his narrative, which, like its predecessor, deals with the present war.

Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish next week a new and popular edition of 'The Heart of the Empire: Studies in Problems of Modern City Life in England.'

Messrs. Methuen announce 'The Church of Christ: her Mission, Sacraments, and Discipline,' a new book by Prof. E. Tyrrell Green, of Lampeter. It is intended to be a simple and at the same time thorough account of the doctrine of the Church and the Sacraments. It has been the author's aim to show that the Anglican Church is thoroughly Scriptural and in accord alike with primitive teaching and Catholic principles.

A ninth edition of Bartlett's 'Familiar Quotations' is now issued by Messrs. Macmillan.

President Roosevelt's recent book, 'The Strenuous Life,' will shortly be published in this country by Mr. Grant Richards.

Mr. William Heinemann will publish immediately a timely political satire entitled 'Clara in Blunderland.' The book, as its name implies, is based on the late Lewis Carroll's immortal 'Alice.' The author's name is given as 'Caroline Lewis,' a pseudonym which conceals an identity which it is not proposed to disclose. The work is profusely illustrated by 'S. R.' with parodies of Sir John Tenniel's famous drawings.

A 'Ping-Pong' manual! And who is better qualified to write a manual on 'Ping-Pong' than Mr. Arnold Parker, the winner of the championship at Queen's Hall, whose play revealed undreamt of possibilities in the game? His book will be published by Mr. Fisher Unwin immediately, under the title 'Ping-Pong or Table Tennis: the Game and How to Play it.' Naturally, the book tells all there is to be told concerning the game, from the way to hold the racquet to the manner of commanding the ball in order to make it deceive your adversary by twisting in all manner of unexpected directions. The book is illustrated with numerous diagrams. For those alike who wish to acquire a mastery over the game and for those who desire to know its possibilities the book is indispensable.

Among the coloured supplements in the February number of the Studio will be a facsimile reproduction of Mr. Whistler's water-colour drawing 'The Sea Shore.'

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. have nearly ready for publication the second volume of their limited library edition of William Hazlitt's Collected Works, which they are issuing under the editorship of Mr. A. R. Waller and Mr. Arnold Glover. The volume is made up of 'The Life of Thomas Holcroft,' 'Liber Amoris, or the New Pygmalion,' and 'Characteristics,' with full annotation.

'The Queen's Wish: How it was fulfilled by the Imperial Tour of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York,' by Mr. Joseph Watson, Reuter's Special Correspondent, is the title of a work to be published immediately by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. Mr. Watson, who accompanied the 'Ophir' round all the Britains, has given a complete record of the memorable voyage, which is fully illustrated with over 150 pictures, most of which were taken by the author.

In her volume 'Shakespeare in Prose and Verse,' published by the Macmillan Company, Mrs. Hufford attempts to do for fifteen of the plays what was done by Charles and Mary Lamb in 'The Tales from Shakespeare,' introducing, however, a large proportion of quotations in her retelling of the dramatic stories.

We have received 'The Advertiser's ABC' for 1902, issued by Messrs. T. B. Browne, Ltd. It is a handsome volume containing eleven hundred pages of articles on advertising topics, lists of the London, provincial, colonial, and foreign papers, particulars of their circulations, specimens of advertisements, &c., and should be most useful to advertisers.

* *

Professor Herford's long-expected volume in the 'Warwick Library,' the series of literary handbooks which he edits and Messrs. Blackie & Son publish, is announced for immediate issue. The aim of the series is to present a critical account of various literary forms as exemplified in English literature.

* *

Messrs. Jarrold & Sons are publishing a new illustrated sixpenny edition of 'Molly Miggs' Trip to the Seaside,' by the author of 'Giles' Trip to London.' Over 600,000 copies of these books have already been sold.

* *

An interesting announcement is made by Messrs. A. & C. Black. The second edition of Colonel de Villebois-Mareuil's 'War Notes,' to be published shortly, contains the completion of the Colonel's Diary, which was found on his body after his last and fatal reconnaissance, and placed at the disposal of the family by the courtesy of Lord Roberts. This portion of the Diary is actually written up to the day before his death!

* *

'God Wills it!' is a tale of the First Crusade by W. S. Davis, centring round the fortunes of a Norman knight settled in Sicily, and of the beautiful Greek girl first rescued by him from pirates, afterwards captured by a Saracen sheikh, and finally won back again. It is published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co.

* *

'The Identity Exchange,' by R. Andom, author of 'We Three and Troddles' &c., will be published next month by Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.

* *

Messrs. Skeffington will publish a new volume by the Rev. John Rooker, entitled 'A Modern Pilgrim in Galilee.' The work will be illustrated.

* *

'Christless Christendom,' by Edward J. Goodman, is the telling title of a story to be published by Mr. Arthur H. Stockwell.

TRADE CHANGES &c.

The old established Bookselling and Stationery business of Miss Gant, Royal Avenue, Belfast, is changing hands, Miss Gant retiring into private life after a long and successful career. The business has been purchased by Mr. W. E. Walton, late Manager, Olley & Co., Ltd., Belfast, and formerly for many years with Messrs. Minshull & Meeson, Chester, and will be conducted under the new proprietorship from February 1.

AN AMERICAN STATIONER'S NEW YEAR'S GREETINGS TO HIS CUSTOMERS.

It is wonderful how interesting the Americans manage to make their advertisements. Here's how Mr. A. W. Faber, of 78 Reade Street, New York, advertises in Geyer's go-ahead Stationer.

It will be seen that instead of formally announcing to his trade friends by letter that his travellers are 'coming around,' he reels off a verse or two, puts it in his trade paper, and we may bet our boots 'Holcomb' and 'Mr. Curtis' will be there on time and book some good orders. Of course we can only give the poem small type, but in its original form it is in bold italic, and occupies a page as large as ours, with illustrations of the pencils, whose virtues it sings:—

HAPPY NEW-YEAR.

I told about the 'Flyer,' very lately—
About 'The Winner' I have also told;
Now I remind you most appropriately:
The 'Copying Ink' are likewise being sold
More largely than before, and surely bound
To forge ahead at quite a lively rate
In that their price is very moderate.
Inspect them when the travellers come around.

I offer five varieties, you see,
Round, hexagon; and polished or plain cedar,
Four of the size which ordinarily
Has been adopted; while their present leader,
A Tablet Pencil, thinner than the rest,
Is shorter, too, and comes with nickel cap.
You may, for aught I know, like this one best,
If dainty shoppers you should wish to trap.

Holcomb will show them, as has been his wont,
In Eastern, Southern, and Ohio States,
Right after New-Year: but, I pray you, don't Omit to note that Mr. Curtis Bates,
Quite lately of McClurg's, expects to call
On Western Trade with my entire line;
When he and Holcomb will, to one and all,
Say 'Happy New Year' and 'forget not mine.'

A SCOTTISH BOOKSELLER'S JUBILEE PRESENT.*

When his biographer condoled with Dr. Johnson on the small profit he had derived from his dictionary, the great lexicographer rejoined: 'I am sorry too.' But it was very well. The booksellers are generous and liberal-minded men.' And Boswell adds: 'He, upon all occasions, did ample justice to their character in this respect.' That there are still such men in the trade all can testify who have any real knowledge of it, and the fact is brought forcibly to our mind by the action of Mr. William Kidd of Dundee. That well-known and successful bookseller has shown his affection for the City in which he has passed fifty years of an active business life, as assistant or principal, by compiling a book entitled 'The Dundee Market Crosses and Tolbooths,' which also embodies matter on other subjects of historical interest. Only those who know can estimate the time and trouble the compiler must have expended in collecting all the interesting items in this pleasant chatty book, with its thirty-one illustrations, some of them, especially that of 'The Executive,' being very quaint and curious. Produced in remembrance of the completion of his business life of half-a-century, Mr. Kidd presents the volume to his numerous customers and friends, by whom it will doubtless be valued for the generous and liberal-minded donor's sake, although it can safely stand on its own merits. We cordially wish Mr. Kidd continued and increasing prosperity for many years yet to come in the business he has so long conducted with conspicuous success.

DIPLOMA OF THE PARIS EXHIBITION.

[The following is a copy of a letter sent by the Secretary of the Royal Commission, Paris Exhibition 1900, to one of the English exhibitors, Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. The diploma is rather a dull, melancholy-looking affair.—Ed. P. C.]

St. Stephen's House,
Westminster, S.W.:
Jan. 18th, 1902.

DEAR SIRS,—You are aware that the International Jury of the Paris Exhibition of 1900 awarded a Grand Prix Diploma to the collective exhibit of the Publishers' Association in Class 13.

Each of the contributors to this exhibit (mentioned on the diploma herewith) is, according to the French Exhibition regulations, entitled to receive a copy of the diploma, containing the names of all the contributors to the collective exhibit.

These diplomas are now in the possession of the Royal Commission, and I have pleasure in sending you herewith the one to which you are entitled.

I shall be obliged if you will kindly sign and return the enclosed post card in acknowledgment of the receipt of the diploma.

Yours faithfully,
L. SENAILLIER,
For the Secretary of the Royal Commission.

FROM THE AUTHOR. PUBLISHERS AND MSS.

'SIR,—My experience of "really good houses" in the matter of defacing MSS. exactly accords with that of "Member" in the last issue of the Author. After submitting MS. of a work to which I had devoted much time and research to two of the best houses in the trade, I happened to open the MS. in a part I had not carefully examined when returned on the former occasion, and found the page lined with pencil marks and the notation "not true" appended to statements of fact. Unfortunately, I could not fix the guilt on any one of these firms, or I should have given the "gentleman" a bit of my mind.

After this experience of publishers' readers I invariably affix to the front of my MS. the appended notice, which has had an excellent effect:—

"As this manuscript is private property, the publishers and their readers are requested to treat it in an honourable manner, in the same way as they would expect their own property to be treated when "lent on approval" with a view to sale; and not to turn down the corners or otherwise damage it, or return in a filthy condition, as is sometimes done by dishonourable firms and their employees."

'Nov. 12, 1901.

H. N. S.'

OBITUARY.

On the 13th inst., at 33 Sheep Street, Wellingborough, after a very brief illness, Ernest John Dennes (Dennes Brothers, Booksellers and Stationers), younger son of the late Henry Dennes, of Hailsham, Sussex, aged 46.

THE GROWTH AND FUTURE WORK OF A FREE LIBRARY.

Among the more remarkable events connected with the most crowded part of the East End during the last quarter of the nineteenth century was the rise and rapid growth of the Bethnal Green Free Library. The building in which its treasures are housed was put up by several well-known gentlemen, who were moved to do something to befriend the poor; but the small collection of books which was placed upon the shelves represented an experiment, no one having any very decided opinion what the result would be. When the reading-room was opened, however, the people came to it; the books were read, and others were needed. The books which were wanted came also; for the appeal of Mr. G. F. Hileken, the librarian, met with ready response, the donors including the late Queen, the present King, and other members of the royal family. The result is that the small collection of books with which a beginning was made has increased until the collection in the reference library alone numbers midway between thirty and forty thousand volumes. The need of such a work has thus become apparent; and the question arises, How shall the opportunities which continually offer themselves be taken full advantage of? The reply is, By putting up a building on a more eligible site, where the literary treasures now in possession can best be utilised for the benefit of the large working-class population which cannot afford to buy books. The building, which seemed to be so admirably suited for its purpose in 1876, has now practically become obsolete! it is inconveniently situated in a back street, the available space is too straitened for the proper housing of the books and works of art which have been collected. When certain difficulties are overcome, the future is full of promise.

Of an evening the reading-room affords a study of life which every observer may give attention to with advantage. Some come to read the newspapers; others prefer books; a more select class will give attention to those standard works which are the glory of our English literature. We have even heard of a few illiterate adults who have to be content with looking at the pictures in the illustrated papers. What is urgently needed is a separate reading-room for young people, who need to be catered for in a different way. There should be a room for boys, and one for girls. What possibilities of good seem to be promised by such an arrangement. One of the chief curses of the times is the pernicious garbage, or at the best the inane reading, provided for the young. If the right means are taken, reading can be supplied to them which, instead of fostering criminal instincts, will tend to convert the readers into a band of hope.

But the work of such a free library as that at Bethnal Green extends very far beyond the reading-room. Some three or four years ago a lending section was added, and this at once became a decided success. In other respects, for those who turn their advantages to account, the institution may be said to have the characteristics of a local university. There are evening classes for young men and women, at which they may acquire knowledge to help them in making their way in the world. Modern languages, shorthand, music, dress-making, &c., are efficiently taught. We once heard of a case—and we hope it was a typical one—of a youth who, through the teaching he received, raised the family to which he belonged from the squalor of one-room life. To teach young women the use of the needle is also a matter of great importance, for it is well known that the cost of making up a dress is often more than the material. Lectures of an educational kind have also proved and it is hoped that eventually the enterprise may be carried out. Many influential persons are also giving their aid and sympathy, and if the general public strengthen their hands by contributing to the same object all will be accomplished. Of course the needs for working expenses are considerable, and on completing their twenty-fifth year of service it would be well if the Council could double their income.

We have to remember that the East End is not a mere accumulation of slums, it is a working-class neighbourhood, a hive of a hundred or more important industries. There you may see produced the finest silk that can be weaved, the choicest furniture that can be manufactured, as well as many other things which in their own department cannot be surpassed. It is because all of these industries are characteristic of the district that the facilities offered by the Free Library for the acquisition of technical knowledge become so important. The student who strives to improve in his trade finds that much may be learned from books. This fact is well known to the librarian, and provision is made accordingly.

A great Free Library of this character is indispensable to the busy and crowded East End. It tends to relieve the monotony of everyday life by showing how and where the most profitable recreation may be found. By aiding the managers of such an institution, friends confer substantial and lasting benefit on the poor. Of late the Library has been making grants of books to other institutions—a hundred volumes or so in each instance being made to certain smaller libraries, institutes, workhouses &c.

G. H. P.

A GERMAN BACONIAN.

A German writer, Herr Edwin Bormann, of Leipzig, is one of the most enthusiastic of living 'Baconians,' or believers in the cult which teaches that Sir Francis Bacon was the real author, the 'concealed poet' as he calls himself, of the poetical and dramatic works generally attributed to Shakespeare. Herr Bormann has devoted many years of study and much money to this most interesting question and quite apart from the main object of his researches, which is to convince his readers that Shakespeare merely acted as the well-paid mask for the real author, Bacon, his books cannot fail to interest all admirers of the greatest philosopher and the greatest dramatist the world has ever known. Herr Bormann is his own publisher, and his well-illustrated works, 'Das Shakespeare Geheimniss,' 'Bacon-Shakespeare's "Venus and Adonis,"' 'Der Historische Beweis der Bacon-Shakespeare-Theorie,' &c., can be obtained from his publishing office in Leipzig. Failing to get an English publisher to bring out a translation of his chief work, 'The Shakespeare Secret,' he has himself produced an English edition* which has been ably translated by Mr. Harry Brett. We can cordially recommend this work to the notice of English readers.

ANNE HATHAWAY'S VALENTINE.

Anne Hathaway: 'What a beautiful Valentine! Such divine poetry! Now, I wonder who sent it—William or Francis?'

[By permission from HARPER'S MAGAZINE for February.]

so popular that when the agents of the Gilchrist Trust were the lecturers the Great Assembly Hall in Mile End Road was not too large to accommodate the thousands who attended. The great East End may be a world in itself, but it is a world which needs to be better understood by the world outside. It may have been unconsciously, but many writers have misrepresented its everyday life.

Work like this carried on needs to be greatly extended. All the friends who are fully acquainted with the operations of the Bethnal Green Free Library agree in saying that a more commodious building, on a more accessible site in a main thoroughfare, is indispensable. For some time past the Council have had this enterprise in view, and it is one in which the late devoted pastor, Dr. William Tyler, showed the greatest interest. He left a substantial sum to be used for this purpose,

ENGLISH BINDINGS v. AMERICAN.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

MY DEAR SIR,—Under the title of 'More Cheap Criticism of Things British,' you protest against certain authors for stating their opinion. I can, of course, only speak for myself, though it is to be noted as remarkable that we should find such conformity of judgment. The editor of the Caxton Magazine invited these opinions, and they were doubtless given, as in my own case, without prejudice. Why, then, are the only two judgments 'sensible' that differ from the majority?

Examine critically the next fifty novels that reach you, and tell us, dear Sir, if we have not some grounds of complaint. Anything more deadly dull and unimaginative than the average English story-book's 'get-up' I'm sure you will not easily find.

Doubtless all criticism is 'cheap.' In fact there is no cheaper article in the literary market. But I hope you will probe deeper into this subject for the benefit of both sides.

Believe me, my dear Sir,

Heartily yours,

EDEN PHILLPOTTS.

Eltham, Torquay:

January 25, 1902.

[What we said was that almost the only sensible criticism was that of John Oliver Hobbes and Mrs. Meade. In some things American binders may be ahead of ours, but for good taste, suitability, and durability we maintain that the productions of English publishers, as a whole, are not 'cheap,' 'shoddy,' 'vulgar,' and 'very decadent,' and are certainly not inferior to American work.—ED.]

NOT VISCOUNT VERULAM.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—In your interesting article to-day, 'At the Sign of the Ship,' you speak of 'Viscount Verulam.' This is quite as incorrect as to speak of 'Lord Bacon.' Bacon was not 'Viscount Verulam.' He was created Viscount St. Albans, with the second title of Baron Verulam. You could call him either Sir Francis Bacon, Lord Verulam, or Viscount St. Albans, but never Viscount Verulam. Allow me to say that I always read the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR with great pleasure.

Argyle Lodge, Very truly yours,

Surrey Road, G. BARNETT SMITH.

ENGLISH THREE-COLOUR WORK.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—Messrs. Cassell & Company have to thank you for your voluntary testimony, in last week's issue of your publication, to the quality of the three-colour work employed in their serial, 'The Nation's Pictures.'

They desire to have it known that all blocks used by them in this publication have been made in England by Messrs. Andre & Sleigh, of Bushey.

In the course of a paper read by Mr. Carl Hentschel before the Society of Arts last year he gave this firm the credit of having taken the lead in introducing the best and latest inventions in connection with tone process work. I think that in three-colour work they have maintained the position which was given them by Mr. Carl Hentschel in his reference to their half-tone work.

It was a matter of considerable astonishment to me to find a firm of London publishers giving the pre-eminence to three-colour work done in France. I know the Lyons firm to which they refer and the work it does. In years gone by they did work for Messrs. Cassell & Company, and did it very well, but for a long time now it has been quite unnecessary to go out of England for this work. I have no hesitation in saying that there is no three-colour work done in America, or on the Continent of Europe, that is better than that which is being turned out to-day by Messrs. Andre & Sleigh, of Bushey, and I think I know most things that are being done. I am led to make this protest, not because of Messrs. Andre & Sleigh and their work, although I think it deserves every recognition it can have, but because of a too common tendency among Englishmen to depreciate the work of their countrymen, especially in matters artistic.

It is quite time that Englishmen came to recognise the good quality of their own productions, where that good quality exists, and considering the trade war which must of necessity be carried on between nations, it is highly desirable that, all things being equal, Englishmen should give their work to Englishmen rather than to Frenchmen, or Germans, or indeed to people of any other nationality.

I am, dear Sir,

Faithfully yours,

EDWIN BALE (R.I.),

[It is quite refreshing to hear a good word for anything English or British. There has been such a flood of pessimism in the daily press of this country of late that it is not at all surprising to find that our Canadian and Colonial fellow-subjects are beginning to ask themselves if there is anything in it; to be tied to the mother country if everything there is going to the dogs is not, they think, an encouraging prospect.—ED. IN-BOARD BINDING.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—The letter on this subject which you have printed under my name in your current issue was written by one of my clerks in answer to a postcard from a bookseller respecting the binding of an Altar Service, and the writer did not attempt to do more than speak of in-board binding as far as it was applicable to the volume which was then under consideration. It is true, as Mr. Zaehnsdorf points out, that an essential feature of in-board binding is that if the edges are to be cut they must be cut with a plough after the boards have been laced into the book; and it must be evident to every bookbinder that a volume which has been forwarded in the way my clerk attempted to describe cannot be cut in any other way. It is a modern custom to give open backs to in-board books, and this is done in the interest of 'finishing,' so that the tooling on the backs should not be injured when the volumes are opened; but open backs are not, in my opinion, suitable for Church Books.

Yours faithfully,

HENRY FROWDE.

CHAS. HERBERT TESTIMONIAL FUND.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—Referring to the letter under this heading in your last week's issue, we should be glad if you would allow us to mention—in order to avert any misconception as to the statement that Mr. Herbert had 'given up his business'—that the business established by him at this address is being carried on by us, his successors, as usual, it having been purchased by us as a going concern from Mr. Herbert on his retirement. We wish every success to the fund, and have no doubt the insertion of this letter will remove any wrong impression existing as to the continuance of the business.

COPYRIGHT IN CANADA.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—I read with a certain amount of amusement the correspondence between the Secretary of the Toronto Board of Trade and the Editor of the Toronto Evening News on the subject of Copyright contained in the number of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR which has just reached me. You will, perhaps, understand the source of my amusement if you glance at the enclosed clipping from the Toronto Globe of Tuesday, January 14, which contains a report of the latest meeting of the Council of the Toronto Board of Trade and of the resolution then passed on the subject of Copyright. Perhaps you will reproduce the paragraph I have marked: I think it would interest, if not enlighten, your readers.—Yours faithfully,

ARNOLD HAULTAIN.

Report of Meeting of the Toronto Board of Trade.

A COPYRIGHT LAW WANTED.

A report of the proceedings of a meeting of the Wholesale Booksellers and Stationers' Section and allied trades, held in the Council Chamber on December 30 last, at which the copyright question was discussed, was dealt with by the Council. At that meeting a lengthy resolution pointed out that in November 1895 Mr. Hall Caine came to this country, the accredited representative of the English authors, accompanied by Mr. Daldy, representing the English publishers, and after a conference with the Canadian publishers, paper-makers, printers, and bookbinders a draft bill was completed, regarding which Mr. Hall Caine announced to the Canadian Government 'that an understanding had been reached with the Canadian publishers. It was a compromise, and, if the lines suggested were followed, would meet with general satisfaction,' and Mr. Daldy, on behalf of the English publishers, consented to this draft Bill.

It was resolved, therefore, that the Council of the Toronto Board of Trade be requested to make strong representations to the Dominion Government, asking their consideration at an early date of this important question, and respectfully urging them to make such legislation as will give effect to the draft Bill already referred to, making it obligatory that a book shall be printed and bound in this country in order to secure Canadian copyright, and continue to be so printed and bound in order to retain such copyright; and that upon failure to print in Canada within a reasonable time, provision shall be made by which the Government may issue to a Canadian publisher a license to print in Canada, subject to such safeguards as will secure to the owner of such book a reasonable royalty upon his work.

This resolution was adopted by the Council yesterday.

ANOTHER PROTEST.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—I am at a loss to understand why a professedly literary paper should go out of its way to advocate teaching boys to shoot with a view to their shooting their fellow-men.—From A CONSTANT READER AND UP TO THIS TIME AN ADMIRER OF THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR.

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF THE TIME OF DR. JOHNSON.

By E. MARSTON.

ROBERT DODSLEY, 1703-1764.

JAMES DODSLEY (his brother), 1724-1797.

ROBERT DODSLEY, stocking-weaver, footman, poet, dramatist, and publisher, was the son of Robert Dodsley, who for many years kept the Free School at Mansfield, Nottinghamshire. He was born in the year 1703. Nichols does not give a biographical account of him, as he has done of some others of the old booksellers, but only brief allusions scattered through the whole series of volumes of his 'Literary Anecdotes.' The father of Robert and James was a man very highly respected in his neighbourhood, and consequently he had many pupils from the neighbouring farmers and gentlemen. He was a little deformed man; he married a young woman of seventeen when he was seventy-five, and had a child by the union at seventy-eight. Robert was probably the oldest of a large family by a former wife; at all events he was twenty-two years older than his brother Henry.

ROBERT DODSLEY.

Not much is known of Dodsley's early days. He is said to have been apprenticed, like William Hutton, to a stocking-weaver, by whom he was so starved and ill-treated that he ran away and entered into the service of Mrs. Lowther: it was in her employment as a footman that he wrote several poems, which were handed about and made much of. He does not appear, in his prosperous days, to have been in the least ashamed of his calling as a footman. When Boswell remarked to Johnson that Dodsley's life should be written, Johnson replied that his brother James (who was then a highly prosperous man) would not thank a man for such a performance; but he added 'Dodsley himself was not unwilling that his original low condition should be recollected. When Lord Lyttelton's "Dialogues of the Dead" came out, one of which is between Apicius, an ancient epicure, and Dartineuf, a modern epicure, Dodsley said to me "I knew Dartineuf well, for I was once his footman."

Mr. Nichols, in an article on the Rev. Joseph Spence, Prebendary of Durham, and confidential friend of Dodsley, says: 'In a malignant epistle from Curll to Mr. Pope, 1737, Spence is introduced as an early patron of the ingenious Mr. Dodsley.'

'Tis kind indeed a Livery Muse to aid,
Who scribbles farces to augment his trade;
Where you and Spence and Glover drive the nail,
The Devil's in it, if the plot should fail.'

These lines refer to a thin octavo volume of poems written by Dodsley which had been published by subscription under the title 'The Muse in Livery.'

In 1729 he published 'Servitude, a Poem'; for this work (says the D.N.B.) Defoe is said to have written an introduction in prose. Eighteen months afterwards he brought out a new edition of 'Servitude' under the title of 'The Footman's Friendly Advice to his Brethren of the Livery, by R. Dodsley, now a Footman.' He next composed a dramatic satire, 'The Toy Shop,' which captivated Defoe, and even Pope received the young footman in a friendly way. The piece was acted at Covent Garden February 3, 1735, with much success.

With the profits derived from the sale of his poems and the result of the performance of his play, he accumulated a small capital, with which, aided by a loan from Pope of £100, Dodsley was enabled to open a bookseller's shop at the sign of 'The Tully's Head,' Pall Mall, in 1735.

Mr. Austin Dobson, in an interesting article entitled 'At Tully's Head,' in Scribner's Magazine some years ago, says that Mr. Dodsley's shop was on the north side of Pall Mall, next the passage leading into King Street, at present known as Pall Mall Place, or, in other words, about halfway between the Old Smyrna Coffee House of Swift and Prior (the site of Messrs. Harrison's) and the old Star and Garter Tavern.

This was the year in which Jacob Tonson, jun., died, and a few months later died also the famous old Jacob Tonson, the elder, whilst early in 1736 Bernard Lintot departed this life. The time of Dodsley's starting in business was therefore very opportune. He had chosen an excellent position and, as Mr. Dobson says, 'he must have opened his campaign as a publisher with considerable vigour.'

Pope had evidently great regard for the young publisher, and assisted him not only pecuniarily but by placing several of his works in his hands for publication. In April 1737 Dodsley published Pope's 'First Epistle of the Second Book of Horace Imitated.'

The greatest honour conferred on Dodsley, however, and the foundation of his fortune, was the fact that he became the means of introducing the great lexicographer Samuel Johnson to the public as an author.

It was in the year 1737 that Johnson thought of trying his fortune in London, whither, accompanied by his friend and schoolfellow David Garrick, he had journeyed on the plan of 'Ride and tie'—one horse between them.* He had an introduction to Mr. Cave, publisher of the Gentleman's Magazine, who found him some literary employment. Johnson told Mr. John Nichols that Mr. Wilcox, the bookseller, on being told by him that he proposed to get his living as an author, eyed his robust frame attentively, and, with a significant look, said 'You had better buy a porter's knot.' 'He was, however,' added Johnson, 'one of my best friends.'

In April 1738 Dr. Johnson wrote to Mr. Cave: 'I was to-day with Mr. Dodsley, who declares very warmly in favour of the paper you sent him, which he desires to have a share in; it being, as he says, "a creditable thing to be concerned in."' Boswell said: 'It has generally been stated that Johnson offered his "London" to several booksellers, none of whom would purchase it.' To this circumstance Derrick alludes in the lines of his 'Fortune, a Rhapsody':—

Will no kind patron Johnson own?
Shall Johnson, friendless range the town?
And every publisher refuse
The offspring of his happy muse?

'But,' says Boswell, 'the worthy, modest, ingenious Mr. Robert Dodsley had taste enough to perceive its uncommon merit, and thought it creditable to have a share in it. The fact is that at a future conference he bought the whole property, for which he gave Johnson ten guineas.'

Johnson's 'London' was published anonymously by Dodsley in May 1738, and astonished the town. 'Here is an unknown poet, greater even than Pope,' was the first buzz in literary circles.

In 1739 he printed 'Manners,' a satire by Paul Whitehead, which was voted 'scandalous' by the Lords, and author and publisher were ordered into custody, where Dodsley was a week and had to pay £70. Whitehead absconded.

It was in the year 1747 that 'Johnson's Dictionary of the English Language' was first announced to the world by the issue of its plan or prospectus. With reference to the origin of this great undertaking, Johnson said that 'it was not the effect of particular study, but that it had grown up in his mind insensibly.' Mr. Boswell remarks that he had been informed by Mr. James Dodsley that several years before this period, when Johnson was one day sitting in his brother Robert's shop, he heard his brother suggest to him that a dictionary of the English language would be a work that would be well received by the public; that Johnson seemed at first to catch at the proposition, but, after a pause, said, in his abrupt manner, 'I believe I shall not undertake it.'

Many years afterwards (in 1779) Johnson remarked to Boswell 'Dodsley first mentioned to me the scheme of an English Dictionary, but I had long thought of it.'—Boswell: 'You did not know what you were undertaking.'—Johnson: 'Yes, sir, I knew very well what I was undertaking, and very well how to do it, and have done it very well.'

The production of the great dictionary was undertaken by Mr. Robert Dodsley, Mr. Charles Hitch, Mr. Andrew Millar, the two Messrs. Longman, and the two Messrs. Knapton, and the price contracted first with Mr. Johnson was fifteen hundred and seventy-five pounds. (See Sketch of Andrew Millar.)

In 1748 Mr. Dodsley brought out his 'Preceptor.' 'One of the most valuable books for the improvement of young minds,' says Boswell, 'that has appeared in any language.' To this meritorious work Johnson furnished 'The Preface,' containing a general sketch of the book with a short and perspicuous recommendation of each article.

In 1751 Dodsley published the first edition (separately) of Gray's 'Elegy.'

This year Dodsley brought out Johnson's 'Vanity of Human Wishes,' for which Johnson seems to have received fifteen guineas for the right to issue one edition.

In 1749 Dodsley brought out 'Irene,' for which he paid Dr. Johnson one hundred pounds for the copy, with his usual reservation of the right of one edition. The play ran for nine nights, but mainly, it is said, through Garrick's acting. It is pleasant to learn, however, that Johnson cleared in all nearly £300.

Mr. Boswell mentions, with reference to Johnson's celebrated Letter to Lord Chesterfield, that Dodsley 'with the true feelings of trade, said he was very sorry he had written it—for that he had a property in the Dictionary, to which his Lordship's patronage might have been of consequence.' He then told Dr. Adams that Lord Chesterfield had shown him the letter. 'I should have imagined (replied Dr. Adams) that Lord Chesterfield would have concealed it.' 'Poh!' (said Dodsley) 'do you think a letter from Johnson could hurt Lord Chesterfield? Not at all, sir. It lay upon his table where anybody might see it. He read it to me; said "This man has great powers," pointed out the severest passages, and observed how well they were expressed.'

MEMORIAL TO R. D. BLACKMORE.

After giving particulars respecting the above, the Author says:

'We have much pleasure in publishing them in the columns of our paper, both because of the fact that Mr. Blackmore was for many years a member of the Society, and also because we love and honour the author of "The Maid of Sker" and "Lorna Doone."'

THE TWENTIETH-CENTURY GIRL.

In our bright little monthly contemporary, the Young Woman, for February there is a capital article on 'The Twentieth-Century Girl' by Isabella Fyvie Mayo. One is glad to read these hopeful lines at the end of the article:—

'My faith is that the twentieth-century girl, standing at rest on a fair platform of social freedom and justice, will find leisure to gather up many of the gifts and graces which her struggling sisters lost in the heat of the battle that is won for her. One who has lived through the whole period of "woman's emancipation" declares candidly to-day that at no time in her life has she had within her sphere of observation so many girls who promise to develop into

BABY-LINEN.

The reader need not be startled; the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR is not going into the baby-linen business; we merely want to show how catching the cypher craze has become. Mr. L. F. Austin, in the Illustrated London News, says: 'At the New Gallery one of the most interesting relics is some baby-linen made by Elizabeth when her sister Mary was vainly expecting an heir. Now, if Mrs. Gallup can obtain access to this, I have no doubt she will find the cypher stitched into the little shirt, revealing that Elizabeth really made it for her infant Francis.'

THE SINFUL BROTHER.

It was at a certain church meeting, and the good bishop was calling for reports. He had a rather stern, sharp manner, which sometimes jarred a little on the nerves of the more timid. By-and-by he came to Brother B., a lay delegate.

'Brother B., what is the spiritual condition of your church?' demanded the bishop briskly.

'I consider it good,' said the brother.

'What makes you think it is good?' went on the bishop.

'Well, the people are religious. That's what makes me think so.'

'What do you call religious? Do they have family prayer?'

'Some of them do and some do not.'

'Do you mean to say that a man may be a Christian and not hold family prayer?'

'Yes, sir; I think so.'

'Do you hold family prayer?'

'Yes, sir,' returned the brother, quietly.

'And yet you think a man may be a Christian and not hold family prayer?'

'I have a brother who is a better man than I am who does not hold family prayer.'

'What makes you think he is a better man than you are?'

'Everybody says so, and I know he is.'

'Why does not your brother, if he is such a good man, hold family prayer?' thundered the bishop.

'He has no family,' meekly answered the brother.

AN ANCIENT PULPIT.

This note is from Mr. Fred. K. Sherlock's interesting little Church Monthly: 'The parish church of Mellor, Derbyshire, contains one of the oldest pulpits in England, if not in Christendom (1330-40). It is carved out of a solid block of wood, and has six panels, five of which are ornamented with tracery, while the sixth is plain, showing the place where the pulpit formerly stood against the wall.'

FIRST YEAR OF THE NET SYSTEM IN AMERICA.

At the close of this year—one of the most eventful to the publisher and bookseller in many years—the trade may congratulate itself upon the happy issue, as a total result, when pros and cons are summed up, of the net price system. The result, we take pleasure in recording, has been due quite as much to the willingness of the public to co-operate as to the individual effort of the bookseller and the vigilance and efficient work of the directors of the two official book-trade associations.

A very large proportion of the trade in books, for the first time in almost a quarter through other channels. Nor have we found, so far as our investigations have reached, that publishers have attempted to take advantage of the net price system to raise prices. The question of series has presented the main difficulty; in most cases where the connection of the books with previous issues accentuated a difference in price, the increase was due to valid and sufficient reasons, and would have been made irrespective of the operation of the net price system. While the inevitable increase in price in the few known cases called forth considerable adverse criticism, the reduction in price of other series and the lower pricing of other books, on the other hand, attracted less specific attention. We think it will be found to be true that on all the books put out this fall the publishers' net return is no greater than it would have been under the old system, or rather lack of system, while the advantage to the bookseller, morally as well as pecuniarily, has been a decided one.

CIRCULAR, August 3, 1901. The volume before us affords no less pleasure than its fellows; indeed, it may be said to have beaten the now well-established record of the series.

Nowhere more than in the Alps, when studying the wonderful rock formations of those colossal mountains, is one brought face to face with what the author of the volume before us calls 'the upbuilding work of the terrestrial forces,' and nowhere else do we realise the force with which the terrestrial and solar powers meet in conflict as when contemplating the effects of those awful storms of wind, thunder, lightning, snow, and avalanches so often encountered in the Alps. 'That experience,' says Professor Von Lendenfeld, 'and the feeling resulting therefrom 'awaken within us a dawning perception of the Divine Power which permeates all things and fills the soul with devotion and joy; and this it is which spreads that magic charm over the Alps by which we are so powerfully attracted. But of a century, has since the summer been done upon a uniform basis of price to the satisfaction of nearly all concerned. The breaks were much less frequent than was expected and obstinate in but one case. In a number of cases even the breaks were not due to malicious intention, but were made inadvertently, often by a subordinate, and were corrected by the one in authority as soon as attention was directed to them. A recent tour through the North and West has given convincing proof that the movement has the heartiest support and best wishes of those concerned in selling and buying books.

Those engaged in publishing books have, on the whole, good reason to be pleased with the result of their initiative. Though a temporary loss of orders has confronted a number of the members of the American Publishers' Association time and again during the past three months through refusing to sell their books to suspected agents and intermediaries, the loss was borne unflinchingly and we believe has in most cases been practically made good

Having been inaugurated so auspiciously and maintained with such esprit de corps by the united trade, there is no reason why the measure should not survive, and why it should not at an early date be extended to cover fiction and thus be comprehensive.

THE ALPS OF THE EARTH.*

It is always a pleasure to light upon one of the volumes in that excellent series, 'Illustrirte Bibliothek der Länder und Völkerkunde,' of the well-known firm Herder'sche Verlagsbuchhandlung, at Freiburg in the Breisgau; founded at Meersburg, on the Lake of Constance, by Bartholomew Herder on November 27, 1801, although, for good and sufficient reasons, the firm celebrated its Jubilee on July 31, 1901, as reported in the PUBLISHERS' to be enabled adequately to appreciate the phenomena observed in the Alps, we must,' adds the author, 'view them with a right understanding. And, in order to obtain a correct standard for judging them, we must go out, beyond the European Alps, which are known to us, and fix our gaze upon the Alps of the whole Earth.'

* Die Hochgebirge, der Erde, von Robert von Lendenfeld. Mit Titelbild in Farbendruck, 148 Abbildungen, und 15 Karten. (Freiburg im Breisgau, Herder'sche Verlagsbuchhandlung.)

Professor Von Lendenfeld has divided this beautiful and comprehensive work into two parts. In the first he gives a general description of the origin of the surface formation of mountain ranges, mountains, valleys, glaciers, and Alpine lakes. In the second he treats specially of the separate mountain ranges. We should like to give a detailed account of the contents of this most attractive book, so rich in geological information, imparted in clear language, intermixed with some interesting recitals of Alpine climbing, but our space is limited. The illustrations, of which we give a specimen, are very attractive, and are, like the text, produced with that luxury combined with taste so characteristic of the house of B. Herder

Notices of Books.

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'The Cathedral Church of Manchester,' by the Rev. Thomas Perkins, M.A., Rector of Turnworth, Dorset, with 43 illustrations. In this new volume of Messrs. Bell's 'Cathedral' series, the beauty, utility, and handiness of which have made it an indispensable guide to cathedral pilgrims, the Rev. T. Perkins gives a bright and interesting story of that ancient church of St. Mary, St. George, and St. Denys, which has seen so many changes, desecrations, so-called 'beautifyings,' and, of recent years, judicious restorations and enlargements between the thirteenth century and the twentieth. It was not until 1847 that the See of Manchester was founded, and the fine old collegiate church became the cathedral church of the diocese. The first bishop was Dr. James Prince Lee, for many years headmaster of King Edward's School, Birmingham, who, dying in 1869, was succeeded by the more widely known Bishop James Fraser, D.D., Fellow of Oriel College. We note a slight error in the account of Bishop Fraser, who was nominated to the See in January 1870, and not in 1890. He died in 1885, and was succeeded by the present Bishop, Dr. James Moorhouse. The illustrations are admirably executed. We must not omit to state that a full account is appended of those excellent institutions, Chetham's Hospital and Library, which is also illustrated.

From the same.—'Lives and Legends of the Evangelists, Apostles, and other Early Saints,' by Mrs. Arthur Bell. In this volume it has been Mrs. Bell's object to 'sift the true from the legendary, to trace the 'original significance of the symbols now inseparably connected with each Saint represented in art,' and 'to go back to the primal cause of the choice of some special patron by this or that section of the community.' That she has succeeded in attaining her object no careful reader of these pages can deny, for her work has been a labour of love and she has much learning and experience at her command. She deals with each of the saints in turn, giving a few biographical facts, touching on a disputed point here and there, and making the subject interesting by the scholarly way in which she handles it. The volume (which is made beautiful by a cover design in red, cream, and gold) is handsomely illustrated, and reflects the highest credit on the publishers. A companion volume on 'The Fathers of the Church' is in preparation.

From the same.—'Rembrandt Van Rijn,' by Malcolm Bell. This issue of 'The Great Masters in Painting and Sculpture' series is practically a condensation of Mr. Bell's larger work on 'Rembrandt,' published in 1899. The chief omissions are the short descriptions of the pictures and the lists of the etchings, which, while occupying much space, were thought to be more suitable to a work of reference than to a handbook. All the essential particulars in regard to the painter's life are given, and a large portion of the volume is devoted to a consideration of his works, the authentic etchings being treated of in the last chapter of the book. As usual in this series, the illustrations are a notable attraction of the production.

From Messrs. A. & C. Black (Edinburgh: R. & R. Clark, Limited).—'Religious Writers of England,' by Pearson M'Adam Muir, D.D. As this is a small volume, it is needless to say that all the religious writers are not included. But the author hopes that the selection, however arbitrary, will be found 'fairly representative of different phases of belief and life which have appeared in successive epochs of English Christianity.' The book is very concisely written, and the author has contrived with great ability to pack into small compass a large amount of material without detracting in any way from the interest of his subject. The book commences with Cædmon, about the year 670, and concludes with Thomas Scott, the author of a noteworthy commentary on the Bible. The Victorian era is not represented. Well arranged and admirably written, the book forms a worthy addition to 'The Guild Library.'

From Messrs. Blackie & Son, Ltd.—'Mateo Falcone, and other Stories,' by Prosper Mérimée, edited by J. E. Mitchell, M.A.; 'Selections from Gargantua and Pantagruel,' edited by E. C. Goldberg, M.A. ('Blackie's Little French Classics'). At first sight it would seem that Rabelais was scarcely the author to draw upon for educational purposes, but the selections have been made with excellent judgment and good taste. In each volume there is an introductory 'note' on the author, in which suitable information is supplied as to his life and writings.

From the same.—'Guide to the Examinations in Physiology and Answers to Questions'; 'Guide to the Examinations in Physiology and Answers to Questions' ('Blackie's Guides to the Science Examinations, Elementary Series.'). The nature of these little books is fairly well indicated by their titles. Each affords much useful information in regard to the examinations in science held annually by the Department of Science and Art, and gives the answers to a large number of questions propounded in recent papers. Candidates for the examinations named will, we are sure, derive valuable help and many serviceable hints from these little manuals.

From the same.—'Much Ado about Nothing,' edited by J. C. Smith, M.A. Those engaged in the occupation of tuition are well aware of the excellences of 'The Warwick Shakespeare' and its extreme suitability for educational purposes. The present volume in the method of its arrangement and treatment is not less likely to be serviceable than its predecessors. In his well-written Introduction Mr. Smith speaks of the history of the play, the date of its composition, the source of the plot, and its literary distinctions. 'Brilliant and artful as the comedy is,' he holds, 'it does not entirely satisfy the modern reader.' Such dissatisfaction as is felt seems to be due 'partly to a sort of conflict between Shakespeare's comic method and his growing imaginative power, partly to a kind of moral indulgence which he was apt to extend, especially to young men of the type of Claudio.' The notes on the text are especially valuable, and there is also a well-compiled glossary, with an index of words.

From Messrs. C. J. Clay & Sons.—'Cromwell on Foreign Affairs, together with four Essays on International Matters,' by F. W. Payn. The writer of these essays says that 'the most salient facts (sic) in the international politics of the world at the beginning of this century are "The rivalry for Empire between England, Germany, and Russia." The latter power, owing to the barbarism from which it is only slowly emerging, he believes not yet sufficiently matured to be in the running with the other two. We are therefore brought to the question of the probable result of the contest for Empire between the English and the Germans. The first essay shows how very differently that great general and statesman Cromwell looked at Foreign Affairs from some of our modern Cabinet Ministers. The second deals exhaustively with the law of nations as to Neutral Trade in Arms and Ships, and incidentally refers to German methods in China and Turkey. The third treats of that important and interesting question, Intervention in the affairs of other States. The burning of Boer farms and the bombardment of coast towns is ably dealt with in the fourth essay, while the remaining two articles are of no less interest and value, for the first is devoted to that difficult question the extent of territorial waters, and the second to that very painful subject, Nelson and the Admiralty. The book is one of real importance at the present day, and merits careful study.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Limited.—'Marr'd in Making,' by Baroness von Hutten. A story of heredity, which opens in a sick room, where the young and pretty mother of a newly born infant lies on her death-bed. There is only one other person in the room, Mrs. Gurney, mother of the sick woman's deceased husband, a very masterful female, who, at the request of her daughter-in-law, has the baby brought to its dying parent. Mrs. Gurney glances from child to mother and notices the repetition in the former of its mother's 'sweet, weak face, beautiful blue eyes, and poor little faulty chin.' Maud Gurney flushes at this look and the words accompanying it: 'The child is no uglier than other babies,' and, while confessing she is weak, adds that Mrs. Gurney is hard on her. Then she asks her mother-in-law if she believes in heredity. To this the older woman answers in the affirmative. Then the baby is baptised; the young mother dies, and the upbringing of little Violet Elizabeth devolves upon Mrs. Mary Anne Gurney, who had told its dying mother that her child shall be brought up to believe whatever Dr. Bell, the clergyman, and Peter Wayne, its godfather, may choose to teach her. Mrs. Gurney herself only believes in heredity, and considers that all Beth's faults are attributable to that, and are therefore irremediable. We are told of Beth's duplicity, lying, and flirting at school and afterwards; and if we read to the last page but one we see what came of it all, and may form our own opinion of Mrs. Gurney's training. The book is distinctly clever and full of movement, and throws a strong light on the manners of some American citizens when residing on the European Continent. Beth's portrait forms a charming frontispiece.

From Messrs. Dawbarn & Ward, Ltd.—'Bamboo Working,' by J. W. Barran. Mr. Barran tells us that bamboo working, although not a new craft, has, for some reason, not received the attention it deserves. In the handy guide before us, forming one of the 'Useful Arts and Handicrafts' series, he gives full instructions for cutting, shaping, fitting, and joining bamboo and other canes and for constructing several typical articles of furniture. These instructions are illustrated by diagrams; and six full-page plates of designs for bamboo articles are also given.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Private Bobs,' by Mabel C. Birchenough (Mrs. Henry Birchenough). Unhappily, really good stories for children are not as plentiful as they might be, but Mrs. Birchenough proves in the volume before us that not only does she understand children, but that she can describe them with sympathy, vivacity, and considerable charm. Her book, though written in simple language, is suitable both for children and their parents. 'Private Bobs' is the name of the little heroine—a delightfully plucky girl of seven. The tale is concerned with her adventures and those of Curleywig (her three-year-old sister) and Lancelot Fallowfield, the young lord who lives in the big red house opposite. Their various scrapes are described with point and humour, and the numerous illustrations by Mr. H. M. Brock are excellent.

From Mr. Henry J. Drane.—'Shrouded in Mystery,' by Sarah, Eleanor, and Harriett Stredder. The Misses Stredder are evidently amateurs in the art of story-telling, for in the four tales that make up this volume there are many evidences of the tiro. There are faults in punctuation, grammar, spelling, and style; but, somehow or other, the authors contrive to arouse one's interest. Apart from this, however, their work has nothing in it to commend itself.

From Mr. Alexander Gardner, Paisley and London.—'Essays on Foreign Subjects,' by John, third Marquess of Bute, K.T., LL.D. It is sad to have to speak of one so generous, patriotic, cultured, and refined as 'the late' Marquess of Bute. The first of these nine essays, 'The Last Resting Place of St. Andrew,' affords convincing proof of the writer's descriptive powers, whether the subject be the Bay of Naples, the Gulf of Salerno, or the Cathedral of Amalfi, in which last has remained since May 8, 1208, the body of St. Andrew, the Galilean fisherman, and patron saint of Scotland. The writer justly condemns the vandalism of Archbishop Michael Bologna, who destroyed, with one exception, all its sepulchral monuments and the clerestory of the nave; and, in the Marquess's words, 'inaugurated an universal reign of plaster and whitewash.' This essay, so full of varied interest, closes with some excellent suggestions for a conservative restoration of the cathedral. The second essay, 'On the Ancient Language of the Natives of Teneriffe,' is of an entirely different character. While staying at Teneriffe for his health's sake, it was necessary for the Marquess to occupy his time with some line of study; and so he turned his attention to the language spoken by the inhabitants at the time of the Spanish conquests. Of more general interest is the third paper, on 'Some Christian Monuments of Athens,' which affords pleasant and instructive reading for the archaeologist and architectural student. The next two articles, 'Giordano Bruno before the Inquisition,' and 'The Ultimate Fate of Giordano Bruno,' although both instructive and interesting, contain controversial matter alien to our columns. The last four essays are as attractive as any in the volume. 'Patmos' contains picturesque descriptions of the isle, and deals lovingly with the Beloved Disciple who there wrote the 'Apocalypse.' 'M. Renan's Souvenirs' does not spare the great writer who was sometimes a ruthless critic of others. 'The Bayreuth Festival' is sure to be read with interest by all who have or who have not made a pilgrimage to the home and theatre of the musician of the future. 'The Prophecies of St. Malachi, Archbishop of Armagh,' concerning the Popes, appeals to all who take interest in predictions, which most of us do. This handsome volume is a fit monument to the ability and industry of its author.

From the same.—'Love in its Tenderness,' by J. R. Aitken. The Kailyard school of fiction is not dead, even yet; we sincerely wish it was. Mr. Aitken is one of the weakest of Mr. Barrie's followers, and we have no sympathy whatever for the flood of gush and sickly sentiment which flows from his pages. 'The young minister followed the body to the grave, broken-hearted, and cried against God, and wondered. When the oaken case was lowered, a shower of snow came on and covered it. Then the sun burst through the clouds and illumined the lily-cross that lay on the coffin among the snow. The young minister saw it, beheld it through his tears as a vision from the grave, and swore fidelity to the Cross, amid the sunshine and the snow, with a pure white lily in his hand.' That is on page 13, and there is much more of the same kind of stuff further on.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'The Proving of Priscilla,' by Louie Bennett. It is rarely that in the first book of any writer one comes across such excellent work as this delicately told story by Miss Bennett; it is distinctly above the average, being mature, powerful, and almost beautiful. It is the tale of an unhappy marriage, Priscilla Lovell being the heroine. Her husband is a cad who drinks, gambles, and makes love to other women. Priscilla leaves him in disgust, determined to live out her own life as a hospital nurse. In the meantime she has grown to love Gilbert Galbraith, a skilfully drawn and original character. At the call of duty, however, she returns to her husband and devotes her life to him. Such is a bald outline of the plot, but it would take much more space than we can command to indicate the subtlety of the analyses of character, the skilfulness of the dialogue, and the elusive charm of the writing. It is a notable book, and we are confident of hearing of Miss Bennett again.

From the same.—'The Portion of Labour,' by Mary E. Wilkins. We are afraid Miss Wilkins's new novel is much too long: it progresses slowly, and with too much detail. Otherwise, however, we have nothing but praise for it. It reads more like a studied biography of a rarely-endowed girl than a novel. Ellen Brewster is the daughter of a factory hand in a New England town. The home life of her parents is unhappy, and she, believing herself to be the cause of strife, runs away, and is taken care of by a lady who finds her in the street. Her joys and sorrows are narrated with sympathy and insight, and the ending is a happy one.

From Mr. Arthur L. Humphreys.—'National Policy: a Speech delivered at Chesterfield, December 16, 1901, by Lord Rosebery.' Everything spoken or written by Lord Rosebery is worthy of public attention; and, therefore, it is well that this speech, which made such an impression when it was delivered, and (to use his Lordship's own words in the note prefixed to this issue) 'appears to have received a large meed of general approval,' should appear with the orator's own imprimatur. No pains have been spared by the publisher to produce this handsome edition in a form and with a finish worthy of any drawing-room table.

From Messrs. Hutchinson & Co.—'Living Animals of the World: a Popular Natural History,' Part XIII. In the great work of education such a publication as this must be performing no small part. It is impossible even to look at the many beautiful illustrations without deriving information; and more frequently than not one is led from their character to consult the letterpress. The present part enters upon a consideration of the bird world. This section is taken charge of by Mr. W. P. Pycraft, A.L.S., F.Z.S. Included in the current instalment are the rheas, ostriches, cassowaries, emus; the game birds—grouse, ptarmigan, pheasant, peacock, guinea-fowl, Chinese tragopan, and so forth; and the birds of the pigeon variety. The publication is deserving of the highest praise, both letterpress and illustrations being of supreme excellence.

From Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack.—'The General Epistles: James, Peter, John, and Jude,' edited by W. H. Bennett, M.A.; 'The Acts,' edited by J. Vernon Bartlett, M.A. These are two further volumes in the exceedingly well-planned 'Century Bible,' produced under the general editorship of Professor W. F. Adeney. Each volume contains a well-written, scholarly introduction, the Authorised Version, the Revised Version with notes, an index, and map. We have frequently had reason to point out the good qualities of editorship, printing, paper, and binding in this edition of the Bible, and the latest volumes thoroughly maintain the excellence of the series.

From Mr. John Long.—'A Daughter of England,' by May Crommelin. The author is scarcely at her best in this novel, but young readers of a romantic temperament, who are not over-critical in their instincts, will, no doubt, find it attractive. The character round which the interest chiefly revolves is a young girl, Alice Bamfield, who, on the death of a miserly uncle, finds herself in possession of a large fortune to which she is not exactly entitled. Previous to this she has met a handsome selfish boy, Clarence De Lacy, on whom she has bestowed her affection, to the detriment of his tutor, a much older and more estimable man, who is also greatly attracted by her. The youthful lover, at the command of a noble cousin, who provides him with his education and an allowance, but whom he has never seen, goes out to Jamaica, whither Alice, her sister, and the tutor follow him, bent on finding out the rightful heirs of the property that Peter Bamfield has left. Clarence, when discovered, is found flirting with another woman, and, moreover, he is much displeased when he understands what Alice intends quixotically (as he thinks) to do with her money—two circumstances which tend to open her eyes as to his real character. Meanwhile the tutor is gradually gaining a firmer hold upon her esteem. Eventually Clarence proves totally unworthy of her, and she confers her hand and heart on the older man, who then discloses that he is a nobleman in disguise, being none other than Lord Eaglemont, the generous relative who has been so good to Clarence. There is quite a touch of Mr. Burchell in this.

From the same.—'An Island Interlude,' by John Amity. Mr. John Damian, M.P. for the Western Division of Treetown, having 'broken down,' is staying for rest and quiet on Toy Island. Although forbidden newspaper-reading, he saunters down to the pier-head one day to meet the incoming steamer and get a paper immediately on its arrival. As the boat approaches he descends on its deck a handsome young lady carrying a scarlet sunshade. On returning to the 'Wreath of Laurels' he is told by his landlady, Mrs. Burdon, of a Miss Felicity Ray, to whom Ladywood Castle and its broad acres have been left by their late owner on condition that she resides there eight months every year. Mr. Damian hastily assumes that this lady must be an old maid, little suspecting she is the lady of the sunshade. We are told how the M.P. makes acquaintance with Miss Ray and her companion, the Baronne de Sautence; how he brings the painter Oliver Panton to the island; how Mr. Damian woos Miss Ray, and how his suit prospers. The Baronne's broken French, or English, talk would be tedious if not occasionally relieved by such remarks as this: 'Everything comes to a point (sic) for who knows how to wait.' There are some rather trite remarks on English and French literature. Mr. Damian (who is said by Lord Helmwick, his party leader, to have 'a brilliant future and a safe seat in the Cabinet when we come into power') 'confessed to the Baronne that he had read Balzac and dipped into Taine, but there was so much that was English and easier, and that had to be read, and life, alas! was too short for a busy man to get more than a smattering.' From such Cabinet ministers in posse may we be delivered. The country could well spare such tactful statesmen as Mr. Damian if he may be judged by his clumsy wooing in Chapter VII. The story amuses, but contains rather too much about literature, art, and politics in proportion to incident, and the repeated descriptions of Mrs. Burdon's teas become burdensome.

From Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co.—'Two Winters in Norway: being an Account of Two Holidays spent on Snow Shoes, and in Sleigh Driving, and including an Expedition to the Lapps,' by A. Edmund Spender, B.A. Readers will find Mr. Spender a very pleasant guide if they follow him in his journeyings through Norway and the Lapp country. There is perhaps not much substance in his work, but he is invariably light-hearted, energetic, and interesting. That he thoroughly enjoyed his holiday there is little need for him to say, the fact is obvious in almost every line of his narrative. But now, not being selfish, he wishes to convey something of his pleasure to his countrymen, and to show them how absurd is their notion that Norway is too gloomy and cold in winter time for purposes of recreation. Nothing could be more erroneous, as he very forcibly demonstrates by his own experiences. Still, it is not everyone who would care so much about ski-lobing and other athletic pursuits as our author, and others perhaps would not have the physical strength to combat the vicissitudes that he encountered during his travels. The account of Norway's Olympic games is certainly highly interesting, and from a distance we are inclined to share all Mr. Spender's enthusiasm for ski-lobing. Included in the volume is an interesting chapter on native actors and dramatists, and the description of a mountain excursion is quite thrilling. The author's experiences among the Fjeld Lapps has the charm of novelty. The main attraction of the book, however, is to be found in the brisk, chatty manner of its narration, and its observation of amusing social customs and such like. The illustrations, too, are a great feature, and if they could only have been placed a little nearer the situation they describe our enjoyment would have been complete.

[Will our reviewer kindly explain how to combat vicissitudes? Is a six-shooter necessary?—Ed.]

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd.—'History of Lace,' by Mrs. Bury Palliser, entirely revised, re-written, and enlarged, under the editorship of M. Jourdain and Alice Dryden. It need scarcely be said that this is a standard work on the subject of lace. The present constitutes the fourth edition, the third having been published so far back as 1875. Since then there have been many developments in the art, and it has been wisely determined that a new edition should be brought out showing all the results of modern research. The text of the original work has been altered as little as possible, and only where later investigations have shown it to be inaccurate, but the chapters on Spain, Alençon, and Argentan have been completely re-written, and much fresh matter has been added to Italy, England, and Ireland, while the notices of Cretan and Sicilian lace, among others, are new. The original woodcuts, with their designations, have been retained as in the 1875 edition, but the number of illustrations has been augmented by nearly one hundred; and several portraits, showing different fashions of wearing lace, have also been added. The book in its entirety forms a fine storehouse of interesting detail for the connoisseur in lace. The opening chapter treats of the closely allied subject of needle-work, and from this to the last, wherein the features of Bobbin-Net and Machine-made Lace are set forth, its pages teem with absorbing information, to which the numerous beautiful illustrations impart additional zest. These illustrations are in themselves an education, and we can imagine no greater pleasure for the lover of lace than a leisurely examination of the different varieties of the art as here so exquisitely and delicately portrayed. The volume is thoroughly comprehensive and capable, and in the matter of its handsome production calls for the warmest praise.

From the same.—'The World Beautiful in Books,' by Lilian Whiting. This is not a guide to bookland for the indolent: it is an artistically written appreciation of the beauty which is hidden between the backs of many well-known, and a few obscure, books. Miss Whiting has a peculiarly sensitive spirit—a spirit that responds to the beautiful not only in poetry and fiction, but also in history, philosophy, and criticism. She is widely read, and, what is better still, she has chosen her books with a fine discrimination; what she says is always worth reading, and she never praises what is unworthy or of bad report.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'The Soul's Ascent: a Connected Series of Mission Addresses,' by the Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A. We can scarcely say that these addresses are sufficiently distinctive of their author to be included in the series of 'Present Day Preachers,' of which the volume forms an issue; but that they present many of his distinguishing characteristics—notably those of earnestness, lucidity of exposition, and sound study—there can be no question. The reader will glean much religious instruction combined with solace from their perusal.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'A Concise Dictionary of Egyptian Archaeology: a Handbook for Students and Travellers,' by M. Brodrick and A. Anderson Morton. The object of the authors is to supply students and travellers in Egypt with a handy book of reference, which shall contain in a condensed form information that would otherwise have to be sought for in various large volumes. Speaking generally, this object has been very efficiently carried out, and the student will be able to glean with the greatest ease all the facts in regard to Egyptian archaeology that he may require. The volume contains eighty illustrations and many cartouches. At the end is a bibliography of the various works that have been consulted in its preparation.

From Mr. John Murray.—'The Lady Poverty: a Thirteenth Century Allegory,' translated and edited by Montgomery Carmichael, with a chapter on the Spiritual Significance of Evangelical Poverty, by Father Cuthbert, O.S.F.C. That fervent busy man and saint, Francis of Assisi, who, in a short life of forty-six years, found time first to be a merchant and then to found three religious orders, drew upon himself the eyes of all men and attracted disciples from all lands. If his influence was deep and lasting over his contemporaries it did not end with his life, for his good deeds inspired great artists, poets, and writers for centuries after his death; indeed, even until now. St. Francis was born in 1182, and died in 1227. The 'Sacrum Commercium' was written, Mr. Carmichael thinks, most probably in the year 1227, and in July, the month after the saint's death. It is a simple but beautiful allegory, telling how St. Francis wooed and won that most difficult of all brides, my Lady Poverty. In the introduction the translator gives particulars of the various editions, discusses the question of authorship, coming to the conclusion that the author is at present unknown, and states that in translating the 'Sacrum Commercium' he has striven to convey accurately the spirit and meaning of the work while preserving the simplicity of the language. The result is certainly most satisfactory, as, we think, all who read this beautiful allegory in Mr. Carmichael's translation must admit. Giotto's celebrated picture of the espousal of St. Francis to the Lady Poverty makes an appropriate and graceful frontispiece. The book is produced in a manner worthy of the historic house of John Murray.

From Messrs. Passmore & Alabaster.—'Twelve Sermons on Grace Abounding,' (The 'Twelve Sermons' series.) Although well nigh forty years have elapsed since these sermons were delivered, they are of a character calculated to bid defiance to age; for they deal with everlasting truths, and are animated by the force and eloquence with which the preacher was so richly endowed, and having so greatly contributed to the spiritual welfare of so many during his lifetime, may still continue to do so after his death.

From the same.—'A Basket of Summer Fruit: With In Memoriam. A Song of Sighs,' by Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon. This title seems a misnomer for a book of religious thoughts and meditations published almost at Yuletide. But, as religion has no affinity with pessimism or sensationalism, there is no reason for religious publications to be cold or wintry at any time. Mrs. Spurgeon writes hopefully, cheerfully, and encouragingly, and there is no trace of biting wintry wind or nipping frost in these thirteen brightly written conferences which are as 'the summer fruit of the great Summer Land!'

From Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Limited.—'Modern Billiards,' by John Roberts, jun. and others. Edited by F. M. Hotine. With 921 diagrams and other illustrations. It is claimed by the editor of this book that it is unique, being totally unlike any work on the game ever before produced, and containing nothing hitherto published with the exception of the first thirty-five pages of Mr. John Roberts's 'The Game of Billiards and How to play it,' which, however, is now for the first time presented in its entirety. Of course it is impossible to learn billiards without practice; but Mr. Roberts insists upon the eminently practical character of this excellent treatise on the game; which, if carefully studied and its instructions repeatedly followed would doubtless do all that any book can do for a would-be player. The diagrams and photographic illustrations are remarkably good; and a biography of the great billiard-player who has done so much for the game adds greatly to the interest of the volume.

From Messrs. Seeley & Co., Limited.—'Medieval London,' by William Benham,

D.D., F.S.A., and Charles Welch, F.S.A. The Middle Ages are generally stated to have begun about 476 A.D., but as Britain was rather behind Continental Europe in that remote period, and even until a very much later date, Dr. Benham is doubtless quite justified in saying that Ancient London changed into Mediæval in the days of King Alfred, and passed into the Modern with accession of the Stuarts. In this handsome volume, which forms one of the popular series of 'Portfolio' artistic monographs, an attempt—and a very successful one, we think—has been made to recall the general aspect of that noble city the greater part of which was destroyed by the Great Fire of 1666. Few more competent writers could have been found for this by this no means light task than the Rector of St. Edmund the King, so favourably known as an antiquary by his pseudonym Peter Lombard, and the erudite Librarian to the Corporation. The illustrations consist of five coloured plates from illuminated manuscripts in the British Museum, a reproduction in separate plates of the principal parts of the remarkable drawing of London from Westminster to Greenwich by the Flemish artist Antonie van der Wyngaerde, made prior to 1561, and reproductions of sketches of old buildings in London by that clever artist John Wykeham Archer, about sixty years since. Every Londoner ought to possess this delightful book.

From Mr. Elliot Stock.—'Bardell v. Pickwick,' edited with Notes and Commentaries by Percy Fitzgerald, M.A., F.S.A. With illustrations. It may be a moot point whether a book on the famous trial in 'Pickwick' were needed. But if the need for it be conceded, the almost inevitable conclusion follows that no one could be found better equipped for the task of writing such a book than the well-known author whose name is on the title-page, who is also a member of the legal profession, and who had, furthermore, the privilege of a long literary connection and friendship with Dickens only terminated by that great writer's death. Limits of space forbid entering into any analysis of the contents of the book, but the author seems to have made a discovery in connection with the trial. At any rate, it is new to us to learn that the original of Mr. Justice Stareleigh was Mr. Justice Gaselee, whose portrait serves as frontispiece to the volume. Yet other illustrations will be found in Mr. Fitzgerald's diligent contribution to the elucidation of a subject which should interest lovers of Mr. Pickwick and his creator, Charles Dickens.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscriber are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

JACKSON'S NEW SERIES OF DRAWING COPY BOOKS

A Course of Drawing Lessons in the following subjects:

LANDSCAPE, FREEHAND, ORNAMENT, ANIMALS, BIRDS, FLOWERS, FRUIT, HUMAN FIGURE.

Each Book is complete in itself with three pages (13 in. by 9 in.) of models and three sheets of specially made cartridge paper for drawing on by the pupil. The designs and copies are from Original Drawings by some of the most distinguished Artists, and it may safely be said that the entire course forms the best and cheapest set of Drawing Copy Books hitherto offered to the profession.

PRICE 6d. EACH BOOK.
NUMBERS AND CONTENTS.

SECTION I. LANDSCAPE: Book A, Elementary; Book B, Intermediate; Book C, Figure and Advanced.
" III. ORNAMENT: Book A, Intermediate; Book B, Advanced.
" IV. ANIMALS: Book A, Advanced.

SECTION V. BIRDS: Book A, Advanced.
" VIII. HUMAN FIGURE: Book A, Elementary; Book B, Intermediate; Book C, Advanced; Book D, Draped Advanced.
SECTIONS II. (FREEHAND), VI. (FLOWERS), and VII. (FRUIT), in preparation.

IMPERIAL COMPETITION IN JACKSON'S DRAWING COPY BOOKS

This Competition is open to all pupils in public and private schools throughout the British Empire. There are eighteen superior prizes for both Junior and Senior pupils, and, in addition to nearly one hundred other prizes, Certificates of Merit will be awarded to those whose work deserves such recognition. Now that Drawing is a compulsory subject, the opportunity is afforded to pupils in Elementary Schools of winning valuable premiums with a minimum of labour, as there are only three pages of models to each book in the Series.

For Conditions and all Particulars of above Competition, apply to the Publishers.

PRESS OPINIONS.

THE 'PUFF PRELIMINARY.'

The preliminary puff put out by the publisher is getting beyond a joke.

We will give presently a specimen of the kind of puff we are now commonly expected to father, and not only 'we,' but all editors of journals which deal in literature. Our readers will doubtless have noticed that when correspondents have to write to us—'more in sorrow than in anger'—they generally refer with delicate irony to the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR as being of a 'professedly literary character.'

But the P.C.—as it is familiarly called in the trade—makes no such claim; it is simply a trade organ, the trade organ, being a 'Circular' for the publishers and a 'Record' for the booksellers.

It is true that it gives 'Notices of Books,' but the intention in doing so is not to trench on the domain of the higher criticism, but merely to give our thousands of readers, chiefly booksellers and librarians at home and abroad, such an idea of the nature of the work noticed as may be useful to them in their business.

Now, it is good enough, and at times bad enough, to be held generally responsible for the views of our reviewers, but when in addition to this we are expected to insert free gratis and for nothing such an editorial opinion as the following, it is time to kick:

'The "Beat-All English Grammar" by — is in the press. The new features contained in it will, it is expected, render it more valuable than any other grammar on the market.'

Why should the publisher expect us 'kindly to announce' such a statement as this? We never heard of the author, or, as far as we know, saw the publisher, and yet we are expected to say that a work we have not even seen is likely to be more valuable than any other on the market. Grammar is not 'Ping-Pong.'

But this is merely a specimen of the kind of statement we are constantly asked to put before our readers—not, of course, by publishers of high standing.

But the fact is this 'puff' business is getting a bit overdone; so much so that for some time past we have been thinking whether it would not pay best to put in advertisements gratis and make a charge for editorial puffs; unfortunately, we cannot claim any originality for this suggestion, as our readers may remember it was projected by the editor of the 'Journal of Applied Science.'

The invention of the type-writer has had a good deal to do with the rise and progress of the 'puff preliminary,' it makes it so easy to send out what are known as 'complimentary notices' to the press. Many authors not only type their own manuscripts, but write their own puffs. We know cases where an author has claimed an 'advance on account' on the plea that he could guarantee to get from fifty to a hundred free announcements of his new work inserted in the papers.

It will be understood, we hope, that we are not referring to the sending to the press of important announcements, or even announcements which are not particularly important, by firms which do not imagine that a paper, any more than man, can live by bread alone, or any other kind of pastry—puffs, unfortunately, won't satisfy the printer or the paper-maker.

Talking of type-writers, by the way, reminds us that we could not for a long time understand why some publishers and authors who are most liberal in sending us 'notes,' with their compliments—we should, candidly, prefer their advertisements—we could not understand why the typed documents they send appear to have been printed during an earthquake—even Mrs. Gallup would find it difficult to decipher them. But what our Printer's Reader does not know is not worth knowing, so we send them in with the rest of the 'copy.' Then, in due course, the proof comes in on a long galley slip with queries by the P.R. on the margin:—

'So large are the advance orders already received by Mr. Tryiton for the great work by the new Russian novelist Popitoff Haswhiskey, that publication must be postponed until the &c., &c.'—'query' in neat violet ink by the P.R.: 'Should not "Haswhiskey" be

"Hadwhiskey"?'—Editorial note: 'Very likely, see copy.' ('See copy' is well known in the Printers' Reading Room as short for 'If you can't read it, how the dickens do you think I can?') So it appears in the next edition of our 'valued paper.'

Then we get a letter to this effect:—

'A CORRECTION.

'DEAR SIR,—Permit us to correct an error in the totally unexpected and somewhat premature announcement made in your issue of the 25th. The name of the great but hitherto unknown Russian novelist whose forthcoming work we shall have the honour to introduce to the British public is "Badwhiskey," not "Haswhiskey." We take this opportunity of mentioning that although we hear the original Russian edition has been suppressed on account of some absurd suggestion of indecency—the plot is slightly daring in its conception—our translation by Miss Stick-at-Nothing will be found to do more than justice to the original manuscript.

'Thanking you, in anticipation, for the insertion of this correction in the columns of your much esteemed and widely circulated journal,

'We are, Sir,

'Yours most faithfully,

'TRYITON & CO., LTD.

'P.S.—For the benefit of your Colonial readers we may mention that we have prepared a large edition of "Amours on the Amoor" for the Colonial market. We are still open to offers from Canada and the States.

'(Private.—We had contemplated sending your advertisement manager an order, but consideration for your space, &c., &c., &c.)'

And then the author actually complains to his Society because he finds he is charged as follows for advertising:—

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Mr. John Murray announces 'The Life and Times of George Joachim Goschen, Publisher and Printer of Leipzig, 1752-1829,' with extracts from his correspondence with Goethe, Schiller, Klopstock, Wieland, Körner, and many other leading authors and men of letters of the time, by his grandson, Viscount Goschen, with portraits and illustrations, two vols.

The Army and Navy Gazette says: 'We have been glad to find in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR an article of a kind which we are not accustomed to find in papers of the class. It seems to us to put forward in an excellent way the argument for teaching boys to shoot straight. There is no advocacy of the hedgerow school, but it is contended that rifle-firing is an occupation that keenly interests youths, and that, if they are taught to use a rifle when young, they are likely to enter volunteer corps later on, if not the Regular line; and at any rate, when the next call comes for men, they will be found possessing some of the qualities which have been found so useful to the Boers. We should link with rifle-firing the art of riding, for it is a lamentable fact that many of the men who have gone out have been the veriest tyros in that accomplishment. The argument is that rifle-firing should be a part of a boy's education, and we understand that the masters of some public schools have the matter under favourable consideration.

'The Under-Secretary' is the title of Mr. William Le Queux's new novel, a story of 'high politics and ingenious intrigues,' which Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will publish shortly. Many of the scenes are laid in the House of Commons and in the drawing-rooms of political hostesses in London.

Mr. John Long sends us a prospectus of an important work, which he hopes to publish about the end of April, entitled 'The King's Race-Horses, a History of the Connection of His Majesty King Edward VII. with the National Sport,' by Edward Spencer. Mr. Spencer, who, under a well-known nom de plume, has been on the staff of the Sporting Times for the last quarter of a century, and whose face has been a familiar one on racecourses and at training centres for longer than that period, has written this history of the racing career of the King from its commencement. The work, which will be thoroughly and authoritatively revised, will be illustrated with nineteen plates in photogravure of race-horses, jockeys, &c., taken from life by Mr. Clarence Hailey, of Newmarket, who is privileged in the possession—by royal command—of the sole right to photograph the King's horses. One of the plates will be hand-coloured, showing the King's jockey in His Majesty's racing colours, mounted on 'Diamond Jubilee.' The work will also contain a special photogravure plate of His Majesty. There will be two limited editions—one royal 4to. and one imperial 4to. We can advise booksellers to apply to Mr. Long, Chandos Street, Strand, for detailed prospectuses, as this work is sure to interest all racing men.

'The Mystic Rose,' by Mr. Ernest Crawley, is a study of primitive marriage, in which the author investigates the same class of facts as were dealt with by such writers as Tylor, Frazer, and Westermarck, but rejects to some extent the statistical method adopted by Tylor, and, to account for the phenomena, suggests another cause than the simple reference to the old maternal system of the family, and the symbolism of marriage by capture. Mr. Crawley agrees with Dr. Frazer in seeking for an explanation in the mental habit of primitive races in matters touching religion. The work will be issued by Messrs. Macmillan & Co.

'Greening & Co., Limited, present their compliments to the Editor, and beg to forward herewith a small paragraph for insertion in his paper, which they trust will be accepted as an interesting item of news. Messrs. Greening take this opportunity of thanking the Editor for the notices he has given them in the past.' Here is the small paragraph referred to. Why do we insert it? Goodness only knows:—

'The anonymous author of that rather daring theatrical novel "Back to Lilac Land" has at last revealed his identity, for his name appears on the title-page of another new edition of his book which Messrs. Greening & Co. are just publishing. It will perhaps surprise most novel readers to learn that the author of "Back to Lilac Land" is also the author of the very clever and brilliantly written story "The Hypocrite," which created quite a sensation when it was published a year or two ago (and which is now in its seventh edition), and that the writer of these and other popular books is Mr. C. Ranger-Gull, a young critic and journalist, who, though he only came down from Oxford two or three years ago when twenty-three years of age, has achieved an excellent literary reputation in the newspaper world, and already has five books to his credit. Mr. Ranger-Gull's future will be watched with considerable interest, for all his work shows conspicuous literary ability and promise of even better things to come. His publishers, Messrs. Greening & Co., announce a version of "The Adventures of Ulysses" from Mr. Ranger-Gull's pen, and we understand that before the end of the year they will publish two new novels, "His Grace's Grace," a story of Oxford life, and "The Serf," a realistic historical tale of the times of King Stephen, which will bear Mr. Ranger-Gull's name on their title-pages.'

We have received a prospectus of what promises to be an important facsimile reproduction of 'The Pisan - Florentine Codex of the Pandects of Justinian,' which is being produced by the direction of the Royal Mediceo-Laurentian Library, under the auspices of the Italian Government. The reproduction of the whole manuscript, which consists of 1,844 pages, or altogether, with the preface, of about 2,000 pages, will be finished within the next three years. A sheet of 200 plates will be published quarterly. The phototype reproductions, which will be the same as the original, will be executed by Messrs. Danesi, of Rome. The historical and palaeographical elucidation of the manuscript will be compiled by the Commission appointed by the Ministry. The edition will consist of 100 numbered copies, of which only 70 are offered for sale. The subscription price of the entire work is 800

Italian lire or £82 (= $160) to subscribers, payable in ten rates of £8. 2s. (= $16) on the publication of each sheet. When the work is completed, the price will be increased to 1,000 Italian lire, or £40. Intending subscribers can obtain a prospectus and specimen page by applying to the Laurentian Library, Florence, or to Messrs. Danesi, Via dei Bagni, Rome.

A new novel by M. Pierre de Coulevain, author of 'American Nobility,' entitled 'Eve Triumphant,' will be issued shortly by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. This novel is said to have been one of the great successes in France last summer and excited universal comment, treating of the American woman as compared with the French.

Messrs. D. C. Heath & Co. have in the press a volume which will deal with the causes and consequences of pauperism, insanity, crime, and their affiliated evils, and their prevention or amelioration. The book will be entitled 'Introduction to the Study of the Dependent, Defective, and Delinquent Classes, and of their Social Treatment.' The author is Dr. Henderson, Professor of Sociology at Chicago University.

Under the title of 'Little Engravings,' and the general editorship of Mr. T. S. Moore, the Unicorn Press will publish in a few days 'Altdorfer' and 'Blake,' the first two volumes of a new series of facsimile reprints. Mr. Laurence Binyon has written an introduction to the 'Blake' woodcuts.

Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd., are about to issue a new work from the pen of Dick Donovan. It will bear the title of 'Jim the Penman.' Under the same title, it will be remembered, the late Sir George Young produced a play which was eminently successful.

Of seven passengers in a first-class compartment of a suburban train last Thursday morning five were reading the Daily Mail.

'An Assemblage of Books issued during Five Centuries' (from the Fifteenth to the Nineteenth), comprising two thousand items, is the attractive title of the new catalogue of books on sale by A. Russell Smith, 24 Great Windmill Street, London, W.

Miss Frances Gerard, who wrote 'The Romance of Ludwig II. of Bavaria,' has written a biography of Anna Amalia, Duchess of Saxe-Weimar and Eisenach, to be published by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. immediately, under the title of 'A Grand Duchess and her Court.' The author has been fortunate in having access to the private papers in the archives at Weimar, and is therefore able to give an authentic record of the Duchess, who was a most interesting personality, and a patron of Goethe. The book is richly illustrated with many portraits hitherto unpublished.

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. have in preparation a book by Mr. Ralph Thomas, to be entitled 'The Literature of Swimming.' It will be historical, biographical, and bibliographical; will include books in all European languages, and be fully illustrated.

With the February Number the Artist has commenced a new series, much enlarged and improved, both as regards the quality and quantity of its contents.

Messrs. Skeffington will issue an altogether revised and much enlarged edition of 'Church Folklore,' by the Rev. J. Edward Vaux. This book contains descriptions of many quaint and exceedingly interesting local English Church customs, most of which have died out, and would fall into oblivion but for such a record as this.

Heer R. W. P. De Vries, of Amsterdam, sends us a beautifully printed and admirably classified catalogue of books, consisting of voyages, topography, histories of all countries, and works on Europe, Asia, Africa, America, and Australia, as well as picturesque views, including original drawings as well as engravings. There are 1,631 numbers, to all of which the prices are marked.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF PUBLISHERS.

The Associations of France, Germany (with Austria and Switzerland), Great Britain, Holland, and the United States have paid their share of the cost of the Permanent Office for the year 1901-2, to which they have pledged themselves for three years. Other Associations have announced their intention to let us know their decision soon.

The Permanent Office has settled its programme for the carrying out in due course the resolutions passed in Paris, Brussels, London, and Leipzig.

It will shortly send to the Associations a circular as well as a memoir concerning suggested improvements in postal matters. These questions are urgent, as they must be submitted to the National Postal Administrations in time to enable these Administrations to bring them before the Congress of the Union Postale, to be held in Rome if they think it convenient to do so.

The Permanent Office will then deal with the resolutions concerning the maintaining of the published price of books and the music trade.

But, while preparing the communications which are to be addressed to the Associations on these subjects, it is a question whether it will not be better to wait for the publication of the reports of the Congress of Leipzig before forwarding the communications.

THE PERMANENT OFFICE OF THE CONGRESS.

SKETCHES OF BOOKSELLERS OF THE TIME OF DR. JOHNSON.

By E. MARSTON.

ROBERT DODSLEY, 1703-1764.

JAMES DODSLEY (his brother), 1724-1797.

In 1758 Dr. Johnson, in a letter to Bennet Langton, says: 'The two Wartons just looked into the town, and were taken to see Dodsley's "Cleone," where David (Garrick) says they were starved for want of company to keep them warm. David and Doddy (Dodsley, author of "Cleone") have had a new quarrel, and I think cannot conveniently quarrel any more. "Cleone" was well acted by all the characters, but Bellamy left nothing to be desired. I went the first night and supported it as well as I might: for Doddy you know is my patron, and I would not desert him.' Garrick had rejected it as 'cruel, bloody, and unnatural.' Johnson thought there was 'more blood than brains in it.'

In 1759 Dr. Johnson wrote 'Rasselas,' and it was published the same year. Mr. Strahan, Mr. Johnston, and Mr. Dodsley purchased it for a hundred pounds; but afterwards paid him twenty-five pounds more, when it reached a second edition.

In 1758 Mr. Spence accompanied his friend Dodsley on a long tour; and on their road paid a visit to the Leasowes, where they were thus noticed by Mr. Shenstone, in a letter to Mr. Graves: 'July 28. Mr. Dodsley and Mr. Spence have been here, and staid a week with me.'

His most important achievement was the foundation of 'The Annual Register' in 1758, which is still published. Burke was paid a salary of £100 a year for editing it, and was connected with it for 30 years.

Mr. Isaac Reed, in his Preface to Dodsley's 'Select Collection of Old Plays,' thus speaks of the original editor:—

'The first edition of the present volumes was one of the many excellent plans produced by the late Mr. Robert Dodsley, a man to whom literature is under so many obligations, that it would be unpardonable to neglect this opportunity of informing those who may have received any pleasure from the work, that they owe it to a person whose merit and abilities raised him from an obscure situation in life to affluence and independence. Modest, sensible, and humane, he retained the virtues which first brought him into notice. * * * He was a generous friend, an encourager of men of genius; and acquired the respect and esteem of all who were acquainted with him. * * * After a life spent in the exercise of every social duty, he fell a martyr to the gout, while on a visit to his friend, the Rev. Joseph Spence (author of "Anecdotes and Characters"), at Durham, in the year 1764, when he had nearly arrived at the age of sixty-one years.

'He was buried in the Abbey Churchyard at Durham, where his tomb is thus inscribed:

'If you have any respect for uncommon Industry and Merit, regard this place,
in which are deposited the Remains of
MR. ROBERT DODSLEY, who as an author raised himself much above what could have been expected from one in his rank of life, and without a learned education;
and who as a Man was scarce exceeded by any in Integrity of Heart and Purity of Manners and Conversation.
He left this Life for a better, September 23, 1764,
In the 61st year of his age.'

Among the books written by R. Dodsley are the following: 'Servitude,' published by R. Worrall, 1729; 'Footman's Friendly Advice to his Brethren' (this is a new edition of 'Servitude'), 1731; 'A Muse in Livery,' 1732 (published by Osborne and Nourse); 'The Toy Shop,' 1735; 'The King and the Miller of Mansfield,' 1737; 'Sir John Cockle at Court,' 1738 (sequel to the foregoing); 'The Blind Beggar of Bethnal Green,' 1741; 'The Public Register' (Nos. 1 to 24); 'Pain and Patience,' 1742; 'Colin's Kisses,' 1742; 'A Select Collection of Old Plays,' 12 vols. 12mo., Introduction and notes by Isaac Reed, 1744; 'Rex et Pontifex,' 1745; 'The Museum,' 3 vols. 1746-7; 'The Preceptor,' 2 vols., 1748; 'A Collection of Poems by Several Hands,' 1748, 3 vols. 12mo.; 'The Art of Preaching,' folio, n.d.; 'Trifles,' 1748, with portrait; 'The Triumph of Peace,' 4to., 1749; 'The World,' 1753-6, 4 vols., folio; 'Public Virtue,' a poem, 3 books; 'Melpomene, an Ode,' 1757, 4to.; 'Cleone, a Tragedy,' 1758; 'Select Fables of Æsop,' 1761; 'Works of William Shenstone,' 2 vols. 8vo.

Of the foregoing works perhaps the best known is the 'Select Collection of Old Plays,' 12 vols., 1744. In 1758, the year of his retirement from business, he founded 'The Annual Register'—a work which has continued annually to this day—and the brothers published Goldsmith's 'Polite Learning' the same year.

As regards Johnson's 'Rasselas,' the D.N.B. mentions the fact that in 'The Grand Magazine of Magazines' Mr. Kinnersley produced an abstract of 'Rasselas.' An injunction was prayed for by the publishers and refused by the Master of the Rolls, on the ground that an abridgment is not piracy.

JAMES DODSLEY.

(Brother and successor of JAMES DODSLEY.)

JAMES DODSLEY became an active and useful partner to his brother, in connection with whom he published the Annual Register.

Robert Dodsley quitted business in 1759, but James persevered in acquiring wealth by the most honourable literary connexions. In 1788 he was nominated as sheriff of London and Middlesex, in excuse for which he preferred to pay the customary fees. His property was estimated at about £70,000, which he gave principally to nephews and nieces and their descendants. To some of them £8,000 3 per cents., to others £4,000 or £5,000 in specific sums. His executors were Mr. Thomas Tawney and Mr. John Walter* (who had served apprenticeship with his brother Robert); to each of them he left £1,000; to Mr. Geo. Nicoll £1,000, to Mr. Freeborn, his assistant, £4,000; to his maid servant £500, to his coachman £500 and his carriages and horses.

For many years he kept no public shop, but carried on the business of a wholesale dealer in his own publications only.

Of this stock a large portion was consumed by an accidental fire in a warehouse, which was not insured. He bore the loss without emotion. He kept a carriage many years, but studiously wished that his friends should not know it. Nor did he ever use it east of Temple Bar.

He died February 19, 1797, aged 74, and was buried in St. James's Church, Westminster.

A ROYAL WORK.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. have sent us a specimen copy of Part I. of a new publication which is to be issued immediately. This is entitled 'Our King and Queen: the Story of their Life,' by Mr. W. H. Wilkin, M.A., F.S.A., who is already known as a royal biographer. From the specimen copy before us, it seems that exceptional value is to be given. Part I. contains 40 pages, and 80 illustrations on the finest English art paper, and two coloured plates of their Majesties the King and Queen, from the paintings by Stuart Wortley and Edward Hughes. The author has had peculiar facilities for getting information on his subject, as to the popularity of which, especially during Coronation year, there can be no question.

* Not the Founder of The Times, who flourished about the same period.

'MRS. GALLUP'S BAD HISTORY.'

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—Under this heading Mr. R. S. Rait contributes an article to the February number of the Fortnightly Review, in which he says: 'Meanwhile we may present to the followers of Mrs. Gallup an argument quite as reasonable as any in her book. When Shakespeare's contemporary, Francis Beaumont (1584-1616), wrote to lament the death of Shakespeare, he addressed him thus:—

"Sleep, rare tragedian, Shakespeare! sleep alone Thy unmolested peace in an unshared cave."

Here, then, is the basis for a compromise. Shakespeare wrote only the tragedies, and so was not to share his grave with the writer of the comedies, who was obviously a different person.

I am no admirer of Mrs. Gallup's theory, for no man has written more strenuously against her; but I am afraid Mr. Rait's history, like hers, is somewhat 'out of joint.' I have heard of men making their wills on the verge of the grave, but I never yet heard of a man writing an elegy on another man in the grave. This, however, according to Mr. Rait, Beaumont must have done.

Beaumont died on March 6, 1616, and Shakespeare on April 23, 1616; and the poet who died in March addressed the poet who died in April in the lines we have referred to. I would ask you, Mr. Editor, how could this be done? I would also ask whose are the lines given by Mr. Rait? I have yet to learn that F. Beaumont ever lamented W. Shakespeare. They are not in Ingleby's 'Shakespeare's Centurie of Prayse,' the book on the subject of allusions to Shakespeare.

I am, &c.

ENGLISH v. AMERICAN BINDING.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—It was not from lack of interest that I did not offer a defence of Present Day Publishers' Bindings in your issue of last week. The serious duty has, however, devolved upon me during the last few weeks of acting as spokesman in a Labour discussion with which we ever 'miserable' binders are just now engaged with 'representatives' of our work-people. That is another matter altogether, but the preparation of a Report of an Address of that nature is a sufficient literary effort for a bookbinder's leisure for one week.

The charge that English publishers' bindings are 'cheap,' 'shoddy,' 'vulgar,' and 'very decadent' as a whole as compared with those of their American cousins is really too foolish to merit serious discussion; but since the charge is made by more or less important writers of books, it deserves serious refutation. To the charge as modified by Mr. Eden Phillpotts in your issue of Saturday last as applying only to 'the average English story-book's "get-up"' I reply 'not proven,' for reasons which will hereafter appear.

This question is not a small one, though consideration for your valuable space compels me to be brief. English and American taste in book decorating are widely different. In England we have felt the influence of Morris, Ruskin, and Rossetti; that influence is still to be observed in our quiet classic letterings and subdued materials, supported usually by simple decorations in gold. In America our English masters are worshipped, their productions and those of their successors find a ready sale, but one looks in vain for the smallest trace of their influence upon American contemporary work. Imitations of Morris of American origin are produced, no doubt, but in all examples of the kind that have come to my personal notice the native American advertising mannerism was present in sufficient display to more than destroy the influence of the Master. I have been told over and over again by the representatives of American houses that there is a something about high-class English binding which is preferred in the States, and that since that something cannot be produced over there 'Will you be so kind as to quote us a price for binding the 520 copies we have taken over inquires?' On the other hand, it is well known in the trade that there is a something about American bindings which is unpopular over here. Travellers speak of the something as 'American' simply; I have endeavoured above to define it as 'the native American advertising mannerism.'

Until ten years ago American cloth binders curled up the backs of their books, which were then printed upon stiff hard paper, so that no reader could see what the book was about without making use of both hands and without employing much muscular power. This device was so much admired by our transoceanic relatives that they refused to take books from us unless similarly curled at the backs. I have had many discussions with London publishers upon this subject, including the respected head of the house of origin of your valuable paper. At one time the dispute became so serious that, in spite of all our efforts to curl up our books, we were threatened with damages if our productions were not accepted on the other side. Much discussion naturally took place upon the subject; our hearts were never in favour of the device, hence small wonder that we failed. We knew it to be inconvenient, ugly, and destructive of strength, but the American market was one which we valued. That is the history, now see the result: the fittest has naturally survived, and to-day the Americans have practically abandoned their curled-up backs and hard paper for the better English model.

Shortly after that discussion our English yellow-back went the way of all human institutions, and something was required to replace it. This was at the time when the late Aubrey Beardsley was astonishing the book world by producing designs without shadows, masses of black with lines of a fineness his genius alone understood. Dudley Hardy also showed in his effective posters that colours could be similarly massed with effect. Following these two artists came a crowd of book-cover designers, both English and American, artistic and vulgar, what you will; the effect aimed at was, confessedly, to hit the public in the eye, as the old yellow-back did, but until the two artists named can be shown to be American citizens such credit as is to be claimed for this movement belongs to the Old Country, although no doubt the advertising manner of these bindings more rapidly spread and fructified over the water.

I do not say we have not shoddy binders over here; that they exist everybody knows, and nobody better than the publishers' binder who endeavours to produce good work. There are times with all of us, as with me just at this moment, when tasteful and carefully thought-out book covers are transferred to such shoddy houses for reproduction in future, regardless of one's rights of copyright in the design, because the cheap, shoddy, house, now that it has a pattern to follow, can perform the work more cheaply. Some publishers, not all, are affected that way in times of depression such as the present. While doing it, however, these publishers know that the shoddy houses could not produce such designs themselves, and it is only because we know that they know it, and will return to us as soon as times improve and they are in want of something original, that we do not instruct our solicitors to protect our rights of copyright. So far as I know, however, these publishers are the exception and not the rule. Naturally, however, good a design may be, it fails in effect upon a shoddy bound book. Mr. Eden Phillpotts is right in saying that this sort of work is to be seen, chiefly, I may add, upon books that have become what travellers call 'cut lines.' While I admit there are publishers who favour it, and some young publishers who pass through a stage (in youth) of favour to it, I do not admit that Mr. Eden Phillpotts is anywhere nearly correct in saying that work of this pitiful kind represents that employed upon the average English story book. Publishers must make their businesses pay; shoddy work does not pay in the long run, because the public will not have it.

Yours faithfully,

THOS. LEIGHTON.

CANADIAN COPYRIGHT.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—I have with some interest read a letter which appeared in your issue of January 4, written by Mr. Edgar A. Wills, Secretary of the Toronto Board of Trade, in which, speaking 'as an Englishman by birth and education,' he complains that a report of a meeting of the Wholesale Booksellers' Section of the Toronto Board of Trade was unfair and injurious. This report appeared in the Toronto Evening News of November 21, and was republished in your issue of December 7.

Some of the members of the Publishers' Section are conducting a petition which aims at their securing legislation under which they will have the right to print in Canada the work of a British author without his consent, upon condition that they pay him 'a reasonable royalty upon his work.' The trouble with some of these publishers is that they think the British authors are getting too much out of the Canadian market. I wonder whether the British author would think himself safe under an arrangement whereby his works could be appropriated in the Colony, and he should receive such reasonable royalty as the Colonial publisher thought fit to give him? This is a question for the British authors to think over.

With several other Toronto publishers I have up till lately successfully opposed the efforts of the Section, but I am now in a minority. I was present at the meeting of the Section on November 21, and I proposed the following resolution:

'That no member of this Section of the Board of Trade shall be eligible to serve on a committee to discuss the copyright question, who is a member of any publishing house, or has any connection with a publishing firm, now on defence in the Courts charged with piracy of the British copyrights.

The substance of what I said in support of this resolution was correctly reported in the Evening News, which appeared in the afternoon of the day upon which the meeting was held. My motion did not receive a seconder, and Mr. Wills for this reason did not record it upon the formal minutes.

Mr. Wills in his letter gives you to understand that the account of the meeting which you published, so far as the resolution and my remarks are concerned, was fictitious, and in proof of this he sent you a copy of the official minutes.

I hardly think that this is consistent with British ideas of 'fair play and justice' to which Mr. Wills appeals.

Your Canadian publishing friends may not be so wicked as the Toronto Evening News made them out to be, but if you read the accompanying report of a meeting of the Section of the Toronto Board of Trade, which I enclose, you will see what your friends are up to, and British authors who read the circular will understand whether the ideas set forth in this report are consistent with their ideas of fair play and justice.

Yours truly,
GEO. N. MORANG.

[We last week gave particulars of the very unfair proposals made by the Wholesale Booksellers and Stationers' Section of the Board of Trade of the City of Toronto.—ED.]

*To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR

SIR,—Will you allow me to correct an erroneous statement in the report of the Toronto Board of Trade meeting as given from the Toronto Globe in your last issue?

It is there stated that I consented to the Bill drafted in Toronto for submission to the Canadian Government in 1895.

So far from consenting to it, I pointed out several important errors to which I could not agree; and being invited by some printers, publishers, and paper-makers to meet them in Toronto just afterwards, I distinctly assured them that I could not consent to any restriction of the rights and privileges contained in the Imperial Acts of 1842 and 1886.

Under those Acts a Canadian can deal with an author as freely as a publisher in the United Kingdom: both are on the same footing.

The Canadians passed an Act in 1900 prohibiting the importation of a book printed outside the Dominion, when a British copyright owner had lawfully granted to a Canadian publisher the right to reproduce the work in Canada for the Canadian market. To this British authors and publishers freely consented, because it is only fair to the parties to such a compact that they should not be undermined by importations by outside parties.

I wish the Canadian publishers would realise that copyright is for the benefit of authors. The Canadians have twice, at Congresses of Chambers of Commerce of the Empire, formally agreed—once when Sir M. Bowell, then Canadian Premier, was present—"that copyright should be uniform throughout the Empire." This can only be by maintaining the law as at present, or a new Act such as that promoted by the Copyright Association, and now under the consideration of His Majesty's Government.

I am, Sir,

Yours truly,

A MISSING INDEX.

DEAR SIR,—What has become of the 'Index to Advertisers' which used to be placed after 'Publications of the Week' in each number of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR?

Now, if one wishes to refer to the new list of a particular publisher, it is necessary to look all through the Circular before it can be found, which tries the temper of both bookseller and customer.

Yours truly,

THE LATE MR. THOMAS PAGE.

SIR,—I venture to send a few facts respecting an earlier period of the life of the above that are known to me, and are probably known to few now living. He learned his business of bookseller with the house of Messrs. Cooke & Son, of Warwick, of which town he was, I believe, a native. From there he went to David Bogue, the publisher, in Fleet Street (a business afterwards acquired by Messrs. W. Kent & Co.), and in the summer of 1857 he came to Cambridge to take charge of the retail business of Macmillan & Co., and it was at that time that I first made Mr. Page's acquaintance. He remained in Cambridge till June 1861, when he purchased the business of Robert Folthorpe, of Brighton, a high-class book business with a good library. In 1876 he received an offer for the purchase of his house in North Street, and this he accepted, and parted with his business. He intended, before settling down to any other work, to take a long rest, which he much needed. But the late Mr. Henry S. King, being at the time in ill-health and in need of help, offered Page an important position in his publishing business, and he remained with that house and its successors (Kegan Paul & Co.) till March 1894. At that date he went to the house of George Newnes, where he remained till his death on January 18 last.

Mr. Page was of a somewhat retiring disposition, and probably did not make a great many intimate friends, but those who knew him well were much attached to him. He was a man of high character, and at the time that I knew him best he was a great reader of all the best literature of the day.

Yours &c.

Cambridge: Feb. 5, 1902. ROBERT BOWES.

'EN SON NOM.*

It seems to us to be no small compliment to the venerable E. E. Hale that his beautiful story 'In His Name,' which was first published nearly thirty years ago, and which has, we believe, retained its popularity up to the present time, should now be presented in a French dress by Madame Sauveur. The translator writes very enthusiastically about the subject, and with great admiration for the author. She says she has made the translation faithfully, without addition or omission, and without any alteration of the author's thoughts. Doubtless she has accomplished her pleasant task very well.

Another remarkable thing about it is that this French edition is published in New York. Let us hope that it will find its way to Paris, and wherever French is spoken.

HOW I TOOK THE LL.D. LOND.

By Miss E. TEMPLE ORME, in the University Correspondent.

'When the Editor of the University Correspondent asked me whether I would write an article describing how I took my degree, my first impulse was to refuse, for I felt that it would be quite impossible for me to write an article all about myself. But, on second thoughts, I decided to agree to his request, and to do my best to overcome my feeling of the great egotism of such a proceeding, for I hoped that the article might induce other ladies to take up the study of the law. Another motive was that I should then be able to express publicly my gratitude to the University Correspondence College for the help it has given me in my work.

'After I passed the London Matriculation in June 1896, I definitely decided, on the advice of my father, to begin studying law.

'I found the work intensely interesting. I had to read three subjects—Jurisprudence, Roman Law, and Constitutional History. Austin's masterpiece on Jurisprudence I read from cover to cover; but the work which first gave me a taste for legal studies was Ortolan's treatise on Justinian's "Institutes." The first volume of this fascinating work contains a history of the Romans from a legal point of view, the other two contain a running commentary upon Justinian's "Institutes," a Latin work compiled at Constantinople under the direction of the Emperor Justinian, and published in 533 A.D., to serve students as an introduction to the study of the law. I also read Gaius's "Institutes," a work of a similar description, but written four centuries earlier by the great jurist Gaius, the manuscript of which was only discovered as recently as 1815 by Niebuhr at Verona.

'Well, I went up in January 1898, and to my great astonishment took Third Class Honours. Everybody advised me to read for the LL.B. Degree, and I did so without hesitation, as I was anxious to pursue my legal studies further.

'The subjects for the LL.B. examination are English Law and Roman Law, and special subjects are also set in each, of which a more minute knowledge is required than of the other parts. I soon became deeply interested in English Law. I worked as before, only with still greater pleasure, for the subjects were of living human interest, being connected with the everyday life of all. I worked hard for close upon two years, and in spite of an illness which forced me to take three months' rest during that period, the splendid assistance of the University Correspondence College enabled me to take First Class Honours when I went up for examination in January 1900.

'I was naturally very much surprised. I eagerly went on to read for the LL.D., induced thereto by the advice of my friends and my own inclination. For this degree I was examined in English Common Law, Private International Law, and International Law. The reading in English Law for this examination is of a wide description. Private International Law or Conflict of Laws is that part of the municipal law of any country applying where there is any foreign element in the case. Thus, for example, a question concerning a contract made in France is decided here by the rules of English Private International Law or Conflict of Laws. International Law (called Public to distinguish it from the above) is the Law existing between nations, or, as the late Lord Russell defined it in his address to the American Bar Association in 1896, "The rules which States have agreed shall bind them inter se." It contains the rules of war, of peace, and of neutrality. Such a subject is necessarily interesting to any person who takes an interest in public affairs and the intercourse of one State with another. A knowledge of it enables a person to take an intelligent interest in such proceedings as those of the Peace Conference at the Hague, 1899, in which not only all the Great Powers took part, but many other States—to the number of twenty-five, I believe. I passed the LL.D. examination in November 1901.

'This concluded my university career. During the whole of that period, with the exception of the time when I was working for the matriculation, I received no help in my work except by correspondence with the tutors of the University Correspondence College.

'If this article, unworthy as it is, induces other girls to enter into the absorbing study of law, I shall be amply compensated for my repugnance against writing it. Apart from the great interest of legal studies, a law degree at the University of London is useful to women who intend to enter into secretarial or government work. It shows that the owner has undergone a certain mental training. Further, although the legal profession is not open to women yet, they may do conveyancing (which includes the drawing up of wills): the writer knows a lady who has been a conveyancer for some years. If women entered seriously into the study of the law, no doubt the legal profession would in time be opened to them just as medicine has been. The nobler sex would not be able—nor indeed would the more liberal-minded of them desire—to keep ladies from the practice of the law. I look forward to the time when a woman shall be as free to advise, advocate, and judge professionally, as she is to heal the sick.'

[These extracts show how well justified Bac—we mean Shakespeare was in making Portia a lawyer.—Ed. P. C.]

NUMBER OF WORDS IN A LEAD PENCIL.

'I have been figuring on the possibilities of words in a lead pencil,' said a young man who has a penchant for the statistical side of things, 'and you would be surprised to know what a man can do with one lead pencil. How many words are there in a lead pencil? How many columns of newspaper matter? How many pages of a book of the average size?' Really, these questions are not easily answered, but one may arrive at a reasonable approximation by doing a little sum in arithmetic.

'In the first place, the average pencil is seven inches long. The average diameter of the pencil used by men who write a great deal is one-twelfth of an inch. Considering the wood and lead the point of a pencil measures about one-half of an inch, one-quarter of an inch representing the lead portion. Allowing for breaks and scratches, one-quarter of an inch of lead will write two columns of matter for the ordinary newspaper, assuming that the pencil is not of the extremely soft character. There are about 1,800 words in a full column of a newspaper of the average size. Two columns would represent 3,600 words. So we get this number of words out of one-quarter of an inch of lead. Out of an inch of lead we would get four times 3,600, or 14,400 words. Out of seven inches we would get 100,800 words. So far as the number of words is concerned we have in this result the possibilities of the lead pencil. Allowing 1,800 words to the column, this would mean 56 columns of solid matter, or an eight-page paper of seven columns.'—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Notices of Books.

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'Measure for Measure,' and the first part of 'King Henry VI.' We have so frequently expressed our appreciation of the 'Chiswick' Shakespeare, the illustrations of Mr. Byam Shaw, and the thoughtful editorial comments of Mr. John Dennis, that anything we can now say must only be a repetition of our previous criticism. These latest volumes in the series are in every way admirably produced, and in respect of their type, paper, and binding, are worthy of the highest commendation. It would be difficult to conceive of a more artistic edition of Shakespeare's plays.

From the same.—'Giotto,' by F. Mason Perkins. In the treatment of his subject Mr. Perkins has to a large extent followed the plan laid down by previous writers in 'The Great Masters in Painting and Sculpture' series. He slightly prepares the ground by some account of the forerunners of Giotto, then refers to his early years and first works, and so passes into a description of his career and the contributions he made from time to time to art. So far as the life of the artist is concerned, it is palpable that much must be based on conjecture, since Vasari's biography from which so many of the details are derived is itself the outcome to a large extent of a fertile imagination, which has succeeded in making a connected narrative from a number of disjointed events. The volume is perhaps a little more critical in its character than several of its predecessors, but this we think is an advantage. It is illustrated with numerous reproductions of the artist's work, notably the beautiful frescoes in the Lower and Upper Churches at Assisi, and the Arena Chapel, Padua.

From Messrs. A. & C. Black.—'Lessons on the Gospel of St. Mark,' by the Rev. A. Irvine Robertson, D.D. ('Guild Text Books'). A capital little work, clearly written, carefully arranged, and full of earnest teaching. It will prove not only helpful to those who have charge of Junior Bible Classes and their scholars, but useful as a guide in the private study of Holy Scripture.

From the same.—'Waverley,' by Sir Walter Scott, with Introduction and Notes by E. E. Smith. This work is hardly the best adapted of Scott's novels to interest the younger generation, since even mature readers find some of the passages exceedingly long and prosy; but this school edition has everything in the way of excellent print, paper, and illustrations to recommend it. Miss Smith's introduction shows that she has studied the story to some purpose, and her notes are all that such aids to learning should be—concise, accurate, and thoroughly explanatory. We have also received from Messrs. Black, 'Kenilworth,' edited by E. S. Davies, M.A., in the series known as the 'Sir Walter Scott Continuous Readers.' The work of abridgment seems to have been performed very well, though we are far from being in sympathy with this mutilation of the classics, and the introduction is a capital piece of work. But the illustrations have seen their best day.

From the Catholic Truth Society.—'A Hundred Readings intended chiefly for the Sick.' These readings are entirely of a religious character, and Catholic in their teaching. They are calculated, to quote the words of the Bishop of Southwark, who supplies the preface, to be 'a great source of help to those feeble and tired souls who find a morning meditation beyond their strength, but who feel drawn to closer union with God, and are often-times at a loss for the assistance which their devotion needs.'

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'His Masterpiece,' by Emile Zola, edited by E. A. Vizetelly. This is a picture of artistic life in Paris during the last few years of the Second Empire, and contains much that is humorous, pathetic, and even painful. It is of peculiar interest to admirers of the great French realist, as it contains a closely drawn and dramatic portrait of the author himself in the character of Pierre Sandoz, 'clerk, journalist, and novelist.' Mr. Vizetelly says in his preface: 'The reader may take it from me that everything attributed in the following pages to Pierre Sandoz was done, experienced, felt, or said by Emile Zola. . . . Personal appearance, life, habits, opinions, all are those of the novelist at a certain period of his career.' The story is dramatic, the characters full of interest, and the plot worked out in the large, ample manner so characteristic of this novelist.

From Messrs. Dean & Son.—'Debrett's House of Commons and the Judicial Bench, 1902.' This admirable work, which has now reached its thirty-sixth year of annual issue, has apparently in the new edition been brought thoroughly up to date. Full biographical details of all Members of Parliament, with illustrations of Armorial Bearings, boundaries of constituencies, results of polling at the last two General Elections and at all subsequent by-elections, are given; while, under the English, Welsh, and Irish constituencies, the Parliamentary population is given from the published preliminary results of the last (1901) census; and, by the courtesy of the Registrar-General for Scotland, it has also been possible to include the preliminary results for Scotland. The many and important changes that have taken place on the Bench during the last twelve months, more especially in the English High and County Courts, as well as among Colonial Judges, are also fully recorded, with other information touching the various law officers of the United Kingdom, the Judges of the Superior and County Courts, Recorders, Metropolitan and Stipendiary Magistrates, Sheriffs, &c. The book is an excellent and reliable compilation that will abundantly repay the cost of purchase.

From the De la More Press, London.—'Ford Madox Brown,' by Helen M. Madox Rossetti, with a portrait of the artist by himself, and two other illustrations. This is an interesting little appreciation of the works and life of the artist, whose genius alone carried him through a sea of early troubles to success. It will be welcome to all admirers of his work, and they are many.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'In Love's Garden,' by Lauchlan Maclean Watt. The poems in this little artistically bound volume, if never particularly passionate or emotional, are oftentimes graced by much beauty of expression and tender feeling. The following quotation, taken from a piece entitled 'I know not why,' will sufficiently indicate the character of the book:

I hear the wild world's wailing breath,
It calls me from beside thee;
But love is stronger still than death,
It bides whate'er betide thee;
As birds that rest on ocean's breast,
Then part, perchance for ever,
So must we go, but this I know,
My heart forgets thee never.

From the same.—'Pendennis,' by William Makepeace Thackeray, illustrated by Charles E. Brock. Three volumes. We alluded in a previous number to the many commendable distinctions of this new edition of Thackeray's works, its attributes of excellent printing, tasteful binding, and convenience of size. These advantages are again very noticeable in 'The History of Pendennis.' Mr. Brock's illustrations strike us as being generally better than those he supplied to 'Vanity Fair,' and in many instances exceptionally good. His portrait of Major Pendennis is everything that the most exacting could desire, and equally satisfactory are Captain Costigan, Arthur Pendennis, Strong, and that gay young spark Harry Foker. Mr. Brock has been less successful with the women characters; they lack breadth and individuality, Miss Fotheringay being especially disappointing. An exceedingly lifelike portrait of Thackeray forms the frontispiece to Vol. I.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'The Fields of Dulditch,' by Mary E. Mann. These studies of the inhabitants of Dulditch and the simple events that make up the routine of their daily life are tinged with an unaffected pathos and quiet humour that more than compensate for any defects in literary workmanship. Readers who can listen unmoved to the account of 'A Dulditch Courting,' 'David Peck's Love Affair,' or 'A Dulditch Angel,' can have very little human sympathy in their hearts, and may confidently be expected to interest themselves in nothing outside their own affairs.

From the same.—'A Bid for Empire: a Story of Love and Adventure in Modern Egypt,' by Major Arthur Griffiths. Though rather crude in his methods, and without any claim to literary distinction, Major Griffiths has such a military ardour of attack, and unfolds the details of his narrative with such vigour, that he invariably makes his stories absorbing. In the present case we are taken to Cairo, and our interests are early enlisted in a dashing young officer in the Egyptian army, named Clive Wolferstan. This hero, in company with his friend, Major St. Leger, has met two American ladies, escorted by their millionaire 'poppa,' on board the steamer from Marseilles, and has promptly fallen in love with the younger of them, thereby incurring the deadly enmity of a certain Prince Khalil, who, as villains go, has about as pretty a stock of arms as the best of them. Soon a fine entanglement occurs. Mr. Lyander P. Wildridge, the American in question, who seems to have less common-sense than the majority of his fellow-countrymen—at least, until the right time for disclosing it arrives—is led by the Prince into embarking on a dangerous enterprise for the freedom of Egypt from British rule, and, what is more, venturing his money as well. From this the most exciting complications ensue. At one time 'poppa' and his two lively daughters find themselves on a dahabiyeh up the Nile, and completely at the mercy of the Prince and his murderous gang. Strange to say, they rescue themselves, though Colonel Wolferstan and Major St. Leger appear in pursuit immediately afterwards. It is a rough, lively story, with frequent appeals to the gallery.

From Mr. Henry J. Drane.—'The Romance of an Emergency,' by Mrs. G. S. Reaney. Critically considered, it would seem that the community to which we are introduced at the opening of this story are somewhat selfish in their instincts—the gentle sisters Edgecombe because they are wishful to sacrifice their butler to their own comfort, and the said butler because he is anxious to consult his own interests to the detriment of his old-time employers. However, honest John's desire to make a home for himself is settled in very original fashion by one of his mistresses proposing to marry him, and so the difficulties of separation are avoided. The consequences of this very unconventional union must be gathered from the book itself, but it may be mentioned, as illustrating the force of habit, that the bridegroom sat on the box-seat of the brougham which took his bride to church. The subsequent events of the story are perhaps scarcely so startling, but we have known Mrs. Reaney in much happier vein before.

From Mr. Andrew Elliot, Edinburgh.—'By Allan Water: the True Story of an Old House,' by Katherine Steuart. Despite the prefatory note of Professor Masson, who speaks warmly in praise of the work, we cannot but think the author has made a mistake. Either she should have written a story pure and simple, in which the facts of history should have been made subservient to the interest of the reader, or she should have thrown all efforts at imaginative writing on one side and devoted herself purely and uncompromisingly to an account of the rise and progress of the Steuart family. As it is she falls between the two stools. But it must not be supposed from this that there is no attractiveness in her work. On the contrary, those who are interested in Scottish history will follow with the greatest pleasure the account of the Steuart family from the days of the early bearer of that name, James Steuart of Scone, familiarly known as the 'Paip' of Rome, to the times of John Steuart and Jean Davidson, and will thoroughly appreciate the skill with which the more important public events happening between 1632 and 1783, and the gradual changes of social manners and habits, have been worked into the narrative. The picture of the state of the country at the time of the ill-fated rising of '45, and of the attitude of the Covenanters and Cameronians previous to that event, is particularly graphic.

From Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode.—'Protection: the Views of a Manufacturer,' by G. Byng. The author of this volume is certainly very thorough in his methods. No mistake can possibly arise from ambiguity of language. In the first place he points out that during the period 1846-1875 the advantages of Free Trade in Great Britain were manifold and its disadvantages nil; during the second period, 1876-1900, the advantages and disadvantages were about level; and in the third period, 1901-1912, he foretells the pendulum will completely swing round, and the advantages will be nil, the disadvantages everything. It is to the proof of this statement that he addresses himself in this volume. But before doing so he throws out the prophecy that by about 1912 there will be no history of English Free Trade to record, for 'there will be either no Trade or there will be Protection.' Mr. Byng writes as a manufacturer of large practical experience, and his arguments are worthy of earnest consideration. In his various chapters he discusses the subject of 'Protection' from the view-point of the manufacturer, the consumer, the middleman, and the working classes, and he has something to say on 'Agriculture,' 'Retaliation and Reciprocity,' 'Imperial Commercial Federation,' and the dangers of inaction, as more especially exemplified by the present Government.

From Farm and Home Office.—'Farm and Home Year Book for 1902,' edited by D. Edwyn Thomas, illustrated. This first issue of the 'Farm and Home Year Book' includes, in its 232 double-column pages of closely printed yet remarkably legible letterpress, hints on almost every conceivable subject about which a farmer, stock-keeper, or housekeeper needs information. Amongst these are: the management of stock in health and disease; milk testing, cheese and butter making, manure buying, pastures and grasses, land surveying, compensation on quitting, ground game, income tax, rating, local government, &c., &c. We have counted the items indexed and find they exceed 500 in number. Where necessary these are illustrated with reproductions of photographs, drawings, and diagrams, thus rendering the information given more easily understood, although it is invariably conveyed in simple language. It is, indeed, a most useful annual which every farmer ought to keep by him.

From Mr. Alexander Gardner.—'A Young Draper's Guide to Success,' by William Naismith. We have not much faith in any so-called 'guides' to success, but if there be any young men so lacking in observation and initiative that they are unable to conform to the ordinary rules of business life, then we should advise them to read Mr. Naismith's work. It is full of well-meaning platitudes, and advice of the most obvious description.

From Messrs. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.—'Our Modern Christian Life: Advent and Lenten Addresses,' by the late Rev. J. P. F. Davidson, M.A., Vicar of St. Matthias, Earl's Court. Published at the request of some who heard these instructions when delivered on the Thursdays in Lent and Advent in the last three years of Mr. Davidson's ministry, beginning with the Lent course of 1896, and ending with the Advent course of 1898, we are told, in the preface to this volume, that no attempt has been made at revision, but that the instructions are printed almost word for word as found among Mr. Davidson's papers. This statement appears to be made as explanatory of a certain want of proportion in these instructions. But the explanation is simple, and no apology was needed. It seems to have been the writer's custom to deliver the earlier part of each instruction as written, and to amplify the latter part, consisting of practical counsels and illustrations, as he went on. The volume consists of six parts, headed: 'The Christianity of the New Testament and our Modern Christian Life; The Spiritual Character in the Light of the Great Day; Fruits of True Penitence; The Nunc Dimittis; Some Blessings of the Penitential Life; and Questions concerning the Advent.' The treatment of the various vital subjects discussed in the twenty-nine instructions before us is so logical and convincing, and the writer so thoroughly and affectionately in earnest, that it must be a hard heart indeed that could hear or read this, in every sense of the word, 'good' book without deriving comfort and encouragement from it.

From the same.—'Hymns and other Stray Verses,' by Henry Twells, M.A. New edition. A very acceptable new edition of a charming collection of hymns and sacred verses, suited to all times and seasons of the Church's year and the Christian's life.

From Messrs. Gowans & Gray.—From this firm we have received Volume IV. of 'Don Quixote.' It is the sixth volume in the Complete Works of Cervantes, which are being issued at the rate of one volume per month. The translation is the well known, and perhaps the best, one of Mr. John Ormsby, and the edition is under the competent editorship of Mr. James Fitzmaurice Kelly.

From Messrs. Harmsworth Bros.—'The Daily Mail Year Book for 1902,' by Percy L. Parker. A little volume containing a mass of both interesting and useful information. Here and there we notice a slight want of comprehensiveness—the directory of newspapers, to mention only one instance, might be readily extended—but on the whole the book, considering its size and moderate price, is wonderfully well stocked with material. To the casual reader the list of short biographies of notable men and women, extending over some forty pages, will afford an absorbing and oftentimes amusing subject of study. Dr. Robertson Nicoll, we are told, 'reads everything and remembers it'—rather a large order, we should imagine; Mr. W. T. Stead has had his windows smashed as a Pro-Boer; Mr. Stephen Phillips commenced his career as an actor; and Mr. G. R. Sims, among his other multitudinous pursuits, is a breeder of trotting ponies. These are facts, we imagine, not generally known to the public.

From Messrs. Hazell, Watson & Viney, Ltd.—'Hazell's Annual for 1902: a Cyclopædic Record of Men and Topics of the Day,' edited by W. Palmer, B.A. It would be impossible within the space at our command to mention all the directions in which the present 'Hazell' shows the determination of the editor and proprietors to keep thoroughly abreast of the times. We may say, however, that there are upwards of fifty fresh articles, to say nothing of new biographies, maps, &c. The principal of these relate to the Armies of the World, the Boer War, Factory and Workshop Regulation, the Housing of the Working Classes, International Law, Mines and Quarries of the World, Telephones, Navies of the World, Trusts and Combinations, the Census of 1901, Railways of the World, and Finance. Suggestions, we notice, are asked for. Our own opinion is that the biographies might be very much cut down, and in many cases entirely omitted, to the inclusion of more general information.

From Mr. William Heinemann.—'The Beleaguered Forest,' by Elia W. Peattie. ('The Dollar Library of American Fiction.') It is always a good thing in a novel to have a heroine who is not only comprehensible but interesting as well; and in many respects it must be said that Regina Grey, the moving spirit of 'The Beleaguered Forest,' is neither. She possesses that clever whimsical temperament, closely allied to the hysterical, which delights in flippant, ill-considered conversation, usually of a highly personal character. Sometimes her talk is full of refined idealism, but more frequently it is mere nonsensical chatter, disguised by a dexterous play of words as highly wrought wisdom. It was Dickens, we think, who in one of his stories spoke of the 'odd' girl. Regina is very odd indeed. She goes to a gipsy encampment and indulges in all manner of fantastic freaks with a handsome Romany chief whom she christens a 'dancing faun'; she bows and curtsies to the trees in the forest where she retreats with her uncongenial morphia-addicted husband, and talks to them as familiar friends. At the same time she has her practical side, and can cook and arrange a dinner with the greatest success. But her disposition is essentially volatile and wayward, and one can scarcely take much interest in a girl who, after slighting one suitor in every way too good for her, goes and throws herself away on another man after an acquaintance of a few days, because during that time her circumstances have changed for the worse. Regina is distinctly the type of woman that men are interested in as chance acquaintances, but, condemned to pass their lives with, would sicken before the honeymoon was over. In this case her attributes—unfortunately by no means uncommon at the present day—produce their own reward, which is by no means agreeable.

From Mr. John Lane.—'The Book of Bulbs,' by S. Arnott, F.R.H.S. No previous volume in the excellent series of 'Handbooks of Practical Gardening' has exceeded in the interest of its subject the present contribution. The plants falling under the heading of bulbs are exceedingly popular with the lovers of flowers, and the majority—such as the crocus, snowdrop, tulip, lily of the valley, and bluebell—are such familiar objects as to have cultivated a particular hold upon public affection. Mr. Arnott has treated his theme in a thoroughly practical fashion, wasting no words in ornate description, but confining himself throughout to a concise exposition of his subject. Broadly speaking, his volume is divided into three parts, respectively dealing with Hardy Bulbs, Half-Hardy Bulbs, and Greenhouse and Stove Bulbs. It need scarcely be said that the first of these varieties is discussed at greatest length, occupying indeed some seventy pages out of an entire hundred and fourteen. The illustrations, as usual in this series, are exceedingly good, and the general editor, Mr. Harry Roberts, has supplied an interesting chapter on the botany of bulbs. The book should be of great service to all horticulturists, both great and small.

From the Leadenhall Press.—'Bridge Condensed,' by Colin Smith. This is a very handy little book on Bridge, and can easily be carried in the pocket. It should be very useful, especially to beginners, as the declarations of trumps and the leads are set out in a very simple form, and many valuable hints are given. Among these may be mentioned the clause in italics at the bottom of page 17. How many games might have been saved if this simple advice had always been followed! This little book is a distinctly useful addition to 'Bridge' literature.

From Mr. John Long.—'The Green Turbans,' by J. MacLaren Cobban. Fez, judging from Mr. Cobban's story, must be a particularly lively place to live in. Not to speak of the filthy condition of the town and the animosity borne by its inhabitants towards the Christians, there are other and more objectionable experiences to be encountered. At least such is the experience of the English doctor, Richard Neale, Physician and Surgeon to his Highness the Sultan of Morocco. Someone gives information to the Sultan where Mohammed is, and he sends an armed force to capture him. Eventually Mohammed dies after undergoing terrible suffering, and his devoted brother Ali resolves to avenge him. But above every thing he is wishful to find out the secret informer through whose instrumentality poor Mohammed was given up to the Sultan. This desire, though there are many other interesting threads in the story, dominates its chief course. In the end Ali discovers the betrayer, but in a person that he had previously little suspicion of. The story is full of thrilling situations, though perhaps scarcely up to the standard of some of Mr. Cobban's previous works.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Company, Limited.—'Types of Naval Officers drawn from the History of the British Army: with some Account of the Condition of Naval Warfare at the Beginning of the Eighteenth Century, and of its Subsequent Development during the Sail Period,' by Captain A. T. Mahan, D.C.L., LL.D. It is always a great pleasure, even for those who are not perhaps deeply versed in naval matters, to listen to anything Captain Mahan may have to say on the subject with which his name as a writer is so closely and honourably identified. Nor is this interest entirely owing to his reputation and skill as a naval expert. At least one half of the fascination he possesses for the public is due to his clear, impressive style, his careful arrangement of facts, and, above everything, to the well-balanced reasoning that is almost legal in its summing up of the various aspects of a situation. The reader instinctively feels that he is in the hands of a man who has a complete mastery of his subject, who is swayed by no sentimental or party reasons in forming his opinions, but has dispassionately considered both sides of the question, and is prepared to pronounce judgment without bias of any description, fairly and squarely. These attributes are very marked in Captain Mahan's present work. From the very interesting preface down to the last page of the chapter treating of Edward Pellew, Lord Exmouth, the book is distinguished by a manliness and sobriety of judgment, if we may so put it, that can scarcely fail to impress readers. Once they have penetrated into the depths of the opening chapter, descriptive of naval warfare at the beginning of the eighteenth century, and have followed the author in his criticism of Admiral Matthews' engagement off Toulon in 1744, and the ill-fated attempt of Admiral Byng to relieve Minorca in 1756, they are certain to be irresistibly carried along to the close of the work. The officers taken as types are Hawke, Rodney, Howe, Jervis, Saumarez, and Pellew; and of each a most interesting, well-studied account is given, accompanied by an excellent portrait.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Limited.—'The Real World,' by Robert Herrick. The world of the boy and the world of the man—how the innocence of the one is dispelled by the realities of the other. Such would seem to be the lesson Mr. Herrick has set himself to show in this story, and his argument is exceedingly vivid and masterly. Jack Pemberton is a shy sensitive lad who has been brought up amid humble surroundings. His social opportunities have been of the slightest. The outside world to him is a region of noble impulses, brave deeds, unselfish ideals. He resolves to make a great effort to enter this world. His first step must be to get to one of the universities, Harvard or Yale. Money is necessary for this purpose, and he enters the service of a relative as hotel clerk at Pemberton Neck. Here he makes the acquaintance of a young lady who is instrumental in still further inflaming his ambition. Elsie Mason is a bright, handsome, heartless girl, with an infinite capacity for looking after her own interests in life. She points out to the boy how necessary it is that he should determine to be a somebody in the world—that he should amass wealth, and force the little men to buckle under to him, thus raising himself above the heads of his fellow-beings. The result of their intimacy is that the imaginative boy falls in love with her, and she has more than a mere liking for him, but it is thoroughly dominated by her worldly instincts. Jack manages to get to Harvard, and has a successful course. In New York, Elsie tells him she has got her chance—she is going to be married to a very wealthy man of good family. She will now have a fine house, horses, carriages, everything she can possibly desire. Poor Jack has yet no knowledge of the real world, and he is dumbfounded. His goddess has fallen from her pedestal. For a time he is overwhelmed. But a man of his intense, loving nature is not easily divorced from the object of his affection. He commences to find excuses for her conduct. Then some time after her marriage he meets her again. She has got the position, the houses, carriages, horses, &c.—and a rough sullen husband. Jack surprises her with a lover. Again he has the pain of feeling how untrue were his first impressions of her temperament. Eventually Elsie, in a scene that is very realistically worked up to, places herself in his power, but he still retains enough of his early ideals to resist temptation. Elsie then disappears from the narrative. It says much for Mr. Herrick's ability in portraiture that he has been able to make her character so interesting. The story is admirably told, with a vivid intensity that is bound to fascinate the reader.

From the same.—'Corleone,' by F. Marion Crawford. Mr. Crawford's books always command a steady sale, and now we have a reprint of one of his most popular stories. Originally published in 1897 in two-volume form, it was a well-deserved success, and we are pleased to meet it again in a cheaper edition.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'The Trinity,' by Robert F. Horton, M.A. ('Present-Day Preachers,' edited by Frederick A. Atkins.) Thoughtful, elucidative, and full of sound reasoning supported by earnest conviction, this is a volume that exhibits the author at his best, and fully accounts for the large measure of popularity he has acquired. The purpose of the author in these sermons is to show, by frequent reference to the original facts of the New Testament revelation, how the doctrine of the Trinity bears vitally on the thought and conduct of to-day. In such a task it is impossible altogether to avoid controversial lines, but Dr. Horton has manifestly done his utmost to expound the subject without giving offence to those theologically opposed to him.

From Mr. Elkin Mathews.—'Through Human Eyes,' Poems by A. Buckton, with an Introductory Poem by Robert Bridges. It is a rare pleasure to meet with a volume of poems containing so many beautiful pieces as this one. Here we have a delightful collection of sonnets, songs, and verses, abounding in pure thoughts and bright and picturesque descriptions expressed in truly poetic language. We have only space to quote one short piece called 'Alone,' which we have chosen as much for its brevity as its beauty.

Sway, sway, tops of the trees
Under the stars so white:
Cradle my soul in your branches wet,
And carry me there till the moon shall set;
Just for to-night!

Sigh, sigh, sound of the breeze,
Lifting my bed so light:
Lace my head in a dreamless net,
And kiss my tears that I may forget;
Just for to-night!

From Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd.—'Beautiful Mamma, and other Stories,' by Winifred Graham. It would be difficult to speak too highly of Miss Graham's talent. She writes in a way to please both the little ones and their parents; her style is simple, direct, and not without charm. We can heartily recommend her book, and are sure it will please all who read it. The volume is well and copiously illustrated.

From Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., Ltd.—'John Henry Newman,' by A. R. Waller and G. H. S. Burrow. Of this book it may be said that it is just what a short biography ought to be. The authors state in their preface that they 'have endeavoured to give an impression of Cardinal Newman's mind in its main characteristics.' In this endeavour they have succeeded; and probably in no other book save the 'Apologia pro vita sua,' if even there, do we come nearer to the gaining of an insight into the mind of that great theologian and teacher, yet humblest of men. He was, however, a striking instance of the humble being exalted. As the writers say: 'Simplicity and magnificence, directness and subtlety, were with him in death as in life. He died, a quiet, kindly old man, among his brethren of S. Philip, and his body was laid in state with the insignia of a Prince of the Holy Roman Church, and carried to the tiny graveyard of the Oratorians at Rednal, and left in the same grave as Ambrose St. John. Cor ad cor loquitur.' This volume, which forms one of the 'Westminster Biographies,' is beautifully printed and adorned with a photograph of Miss Emmeline Deane's portrait of the Cardinal, painted the year before he died, and now in the National Portrait Gallery.

From the Royal Institution of Great Britain.—'Low-Temperature Research,' by Miss Agnes M. Clerke. During the last ten years considerable advance has been made in the development of low-temperature chemistry, and Miss Clerke's essay on what has been accomplished in the chemical world by means of experiments in exceedingly low temperatures is very opportune. Her chapters on the liquefaction of hydrogen and fluorine are not too technical to be enjoyed by the average reader, but the greater part of her clever essay will appeal only to those who have special knowledge of the subject.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'Gabriele Rossetti,' a versified Autobiography, translated and supplemented by William Michael Rossetti. That Gabriele Rossetti, the father of those two gifted beings Dante Gabriel and Christina Rossetti, was an eminent Italian poet, a scholar, a strikingly original commentator on the writings of Dante, a fervent patriot, and an amiable man will be generally conceded, and we gladly welcome this filial tribute to his memory, which tells us so much we wish to know about himself, his writings, and his friends. We think, however, the translator would have done equal justice to his father's Autobiography if he had given it in a prose version. However pleasing a poem may be when read in the language in which it was written, it seldom preserves its beauty when translated. This is practically admitted by Mr. William Rossetti himself when leaving six of his father's poems to the perusal of readers acquainted with Italian, on the plea that 'to try to translate these would be little else than to scheme deliberately to spoil them.' As it is, we must confess to having read with more pleasure Mr. Rossetti's introductory historical narrative relative to the whilom kingdom of the Two Sicilies, his father's and his own notes to the Autobiography, and the letters of Gabriele Rossetti, of Barone Seymour Kirkup, and of Joseph Mazzini, full as they are of personal, political, and literary interest, more especially as regards the Dante comment. The reproductions of Gabriele Rossetti's early drawing, of the oil painting of him by his son Dante Gabriel, of the latter's pencil drawings of his sister Christina and his uncle Polidori, of Filippo Pistrucchi's sketch of Dante Gabriel and William Michael, and of a photograph of Rossetti's wife and two daughters are admirable, and lend a charm to this interesting volume.

From the same.—'Peter, a Parasite,' by E. Maria Albanesi. Peter Mariston is the central figure of Madame Albanesi's new novel, but he is a character with whom we have not the least sympathy, and in whom we have no shadow of interest. We are willing to concede that it is legitimate for the novelist to select a cad round whom to write a story if, by doing so, any good purpose is served; but in the present case Mariston is merely a lay figure. He has no life, no reality. He exists on other people, and makes himself pleasant when it profits him to do so; but so do thousands of other men. He is not sufficiently differentiated from his class to make his personality interesting, and in spite of Madame Albanesi's cleverness she has not contrived to get below the surface of his character.

From Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co. Ltd.—'Reflections on the Art of Life: Maximes et Pensées,' selected and translated from the French by J. Raymond Solly. This little anthology of concise and witty thoughts from the French is drawn from a very wide range of writers extending from the period of Montaigne to the present day. It naturally includes many examples from that series of authors of maxims, pensées, &c., which is one of the greatest and most characteristic glories of French literature. It consists not only of a selection of extracts from this particular group, but, passing 'from grave to gay, from lively to severe,' it includes any striking or epigrammatic sentences from the writings of philosopher or statesman, artist or journalist that the compiler met with in the course of prolonged wanderings among the highways and byways of the French republic of letters. To students no doubt a good many of the citations will be old friends masquerading in new English costumes that may be severely criticised, but it is hoped that even these may meet with a sufficiency of new faces to make them interested to glance at its contents. As regards arrangement, the material has been distributed in ten chapters under the headings of Friendship, Youth and Age, Art and Literature, &c., and care has been taken to make the thoughts lead on naturally, one to the next, as much as was possible. It is attractively produced, and although, of course, what is a platitude to one reader may be a witty thought to another, it strikes us as being a more successful collection than such things usually are. It will be a god-send to those almanack-makers who love to rub something in as well as the date each day.

From Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co., Limited.—'What Great Men have said of Great Men: a Dictionary of Criticisms,' by William Wale. The title of this work is a little bit of a misnomer, seeing that a large number of the writers whose opinions are quoted can scarcely be termed great, whatever the subjects of their criticisms may be. However, the reader of a literary turn of mind is not likely to be particularly censorious when so much pleasure attends him in his investigation of the volume. And one of the things that will first strike him is the extreme diversity of opinion expressed. If one 'great man' pronounces a distinguished individual black, another with equal fervour is certain to proclaim him snowy white. This shows how much personal temperament has to do with criticism. Sometimes to meet with a discordant note amid a wild outburst of laudatory trumpeting is almost pleasant; it gives grip to our own view, and adds to our balance. Thus in the opinion of Mr. W. J. Dawson, 'Dickens is always a boy in his humour and exaggerates his tragedy, as a man would who relies for his materials on imagination rather than experience; and, moreover, he very seldom gives us any sense of intellectual resource'; while Professor Blackie confesses that he 'could never learn anything from Thackeray. There is a certain feeble amiability even about his best characters, which, if it is free from the depressing influence of his bad ones, is certainly anything but bracing.' These outspoken criticisms cause one to reflect and to probe into the foundations of our own opinions.

From Mr. Edward Stanford.—'The Gold of Ophir: Whence brought and by Whom,' by Professor A. H. Keane, F.R.G.S. New material accumulated within the last thirty years has induced the author to re-open the discussion of a question which has often been declared to be insoluble. Into an examination of this material he enters with all the skill and ardour of an expert. No region is left unexplored, no field of inquiry neglected. It is impossible here to follow in detail the course of Professor Keane's reasoning, but to the archaeologist we can recommend the book as one of great interest. One of the most important sections of the volume refers to the relationship between the Malagasy inhabitants of Madagascar and their Himyaritic, Phœnician, and Jewish visitors from the Northern Hemisphere, and it will come as a surprise to folklorists to find that many of the myths, legends, nursery rhymes, and stories popular among the Malagasy people are strikingly analogous to those current from time out of mind amongst the European populations, and that the explanation lies probably in the gold-hunting expeditions despatched by Solomon and his friend Hiram to the Southern waters some three thousand years ago.

From Mr. Arthur H. Stockwell.—'A Marriage through a Mystery,' by W. Harrison. This is number nine in Mr. Stockwell's series of 'Popular Stories.' It is wholesome, well written, and superior to many tales by better-known writers. The hero turns amateur detective, goes through many exciting adventures, and gains the £500 reward offered for the capture of the murderer or murderers of Squire Benson. With this money he is able to marry the lady to whom he is engaged, and the last page is descriptive of the wedding.

From Messrs. Anthony Treherne & Co., Ltd.—'The Sign of the Prophet: a Tale of Tecumseh and Tippecanoe,' by James Ball Naylor. The scene of this story is laid at the beginning of the last century, when the British, aided by the Shawnees and other Indian tribes, were endeavouring to drive the Americans from the Ohio and Mississippi valleys. It is full of exciting incident of backwoods life, and should prove particularly fascinating to boy readers. In Joe Farley, the brave loyal trapper, with his honest outspoken nature and comical way of expressing himself, they will make the acquaintance of a character that from time immemorial has had great attraction for them, and a more spirited set of adventurers than the hero Ross Douglas, 'Bright Wave' the Indian, and loquacious old Joe, could scarcely be found. The story will hold young people in a most enjoyable state of bondage from beginning to end.

From the same.—'Stage Silhouettes,' by Sidney Dark. Illustrated. That 'one man in his time plays many parts' may naturally be presupposed of play actors. Nevertheless some readers of the twenty sketches of popular actors, actresses, and playwrights contained in this attractive volume may be surprised to learn that Mr. Charles Wyndham holds the diplomas of physician and surgeon, that he went to America in 1863, and served as an army surgeon throughout the war between North and South; that Miss Violet Vanbrugh is the daughter of a Devonshire parson; that Mr. Arthur Bourchier is a University man turned actor; and that the popular dramatist Mr. Arthur Jones was once upon a time a 'commercial.' The portraits accompanying those silhouettes are exceptionally good, and will be appreciated by the admirers of those celebrities they so vividly portray.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'The Land of the Blue Gown,' by Mrs. Archibald Little. Candidly, we should have enjoyed Mrs. Little's book very much more had it been less weighty, but the thick surface-coated paper which has been used—with the object, we presume, of bringing out more effectively the beauty of the many illustrations—renders it almost impossible to read the book with any comfort without support from a stand or table. However, after this preliminary growl, we can testify with much heartiness to the interest of the work. Mrs. Little has the gift of keen observation, and she writes in a frank, unembarrassed manner (occasionally, it must be confessed, a little slipshod) that is bound to place her on good terms with her readers. Evidently, she is not without a certain amount of sympathy for the Chinese, and in her account of their social life and customs, as noticed during her visits to Peking, Pilot Town, Chefoo, Shanghai, Ningpo, Wuhu, Ichang, Fengtu, and more unfrequented portions of the Celestial Empire, she is invariably very quick to mark such characteristics as make for their credit. At one time she was quartered at a farmstead near Chungking, fifteen hundred miles in the interior of the country, and her description of the life, as extracted for the most part from the diary she kept during her three months of residence, is exceedingly interesting. The chapter following treats of the anti-foreign riots in Western China, of which a highly graphic picture is given, and in subsequent sections Mrs. Little writes of Miss Annie Taylor's experiences as a representative of the China Inland Mission among the Tibetans and other little-known border tribes, while the account of the author's tour in support of the Anti-footbinding Society, with which the book closes, is certainly not its least interesting portion. Footbinding, it may be mentioned, is one of China's oldest and most deep-rooted customs. We have already referred to the illustrations of this volume. They are about one hundred and fifty in number, full-page and otherwise, and without doubt constitute a powerful attraction of the work.

From Messrs. H. Virtue & Co., Limited.—'Art Sales of the Year 1901: being a Record of the Prices obtained at Auction for Pictures and Prints sold from January 1901 to the end of the Season,' edited by J. Herbert Slater. This is a companion volume to 'Book Prices Current,' the pictures and prints of the year being treated on much the same principle as the books in the older annual. It should, we think, with time and the improvements that are likely from year to year to be introduced into it as experience shows their necessity, come to be distinctly useful. Even now it has all the elements of a substantial success. A feature to which especial attention should be directed is the index. This is particularly full and comprehensive; each work described is indexed twice, and every print three times at least—'under the title of the subject, under the name of the painter, the name of the engraver where a print is in question, and under the fancy title where there is one.' In this way it should be easy to find out any picture or print, no matter of how little importance, that has been sold within the last twelve months; and though at present only the results of the London sales are given in the book it is hoped in future issues to include other centres as well. The volume affords strong testimony to Mr. Slater's energy and painstaking labour.

NEW EDITIONS.—In their new well-printed edition of Thackeray's Works, Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have issued 'The Newcomes.' The book contains facsimiles of the wrapper to the first monthly part, and of the title-pages to Vols. I. and II. It also contains the original illustrations of Richard Doyle. In the matter of its 'get up' nothing could be better, and the binding is especially neat and tasteful.—Mr. David Christie Murray's powerful and to some extent humorous story of 'His Own Ghost' has been added by Messrs. Chatto & Windus to their 'Two Shilling Novels.' This series, it maybe remarked, is printed in clear large type, has an attractive pictorial cover, and is particularly light and easy to handle.—From Messrs. George Newnes, Limited, we have received 'The Pilgrim's Progress,' by John Bunyan, an excellent edition of this classic in two volumes, with illustrations by Edmund J. Sullivan. It forms the second issue of the 'Caxton Series,' a library of small volumes in limp lambskin binding that we highly commended when noticing the first volume of the series, 'Undine and Aslauga's Knight.'—To their exceptionally neat 'Little Library' Messrs. Methuen have added Jane Austen's 'Northanger Abbey,' which Macaulay, in his essay on 'Madame D'Arblay,' it may be remembered, pronounced 'worth all Dickens and Pliny together.' The volume is graced with a well-designed frontispiece by F. D. Bedford.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

. In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo., royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: 1 inch = 2½ centimetres.

WILLIAM BLACK, Novelist.

A Memoir.

By SIR WEMYSS REID,

Author of 'Life of the Right Hon. W. E. Forster,' 'Life of Monckton Milnes, First Lord Houghton,' 'Life of Lord Playfair,' Editor of 'Life of W. E. Gladstone,' &c., &c.

SIR WEMYSS REID was on terms of familiar intercourse with Mr. Black for many years, and has written this Memoir from fulness of knowledge and in thorough sympathy with his subject. He has prepared this work in conjunction with the family of the late novelist, and has gone through a mass of correspondence, of which he has made full use.

Many facts of great interest with regard to the relationship between Mr. Black's novels and his own personal experience will be given. It is not generally known how close a connection existed between these. Strange as it may appear, the Novelist never described an imaginary scene. He was a keen student and observer of sea and sky, of mountain and torrent, of fen and moor, of tree and flower, and the local colour in his books, which lends them so engrossing a charm, was transferred from Nature to the printed page with a care that has never been exceeded by the most careful of landscape painters.

There is much of interest in his early life that will be set forth in the pages of the work.

The account of Mr. Black's visit to America and his experiences there, his views of Americans and their ways, are likely to command special attention on both sides of the Atlantic.

Above all, the personality of Mr. Black, the charm he exercised in his relations with the inner circle of his friends, will be fully conveyed to the reader in the pages of the book.

An American Review of an American Book

From the New York NATION, January 9, 1902

A JAPANESE MISCELLANY

By LAFADIO HEARN.

'Mr. Hearn's "honourable" offering—to talk in Japanese style—for this book year consists of six stories, or rather condensed novels; three chapters entitled "Folk-lore Gleanings"; and six light essays, to which he gives the name "Studies Here and There." His text is marked by the customary lushness of rhetoric that in flavour is rather French than English, while there seems no lack of sensitiveness to things visible and invisible in Japanese life. He catches upon his page the subtle tints and aromas of a life and civilisation unique by reason of their island growth during a thousand or two years. Yet we ask whether it is not time to cease the endless and monotonous reiteration of the words "honourable," "august," &c., in expression of the idea conveyed by the Japanese prefix o, which certainly gives a false and exaggerated notion of the commonplaces of Japanese life. The North American Indians are much like their probable relatives, the Japanese, not only in having no simple term signifying "brother" (or sister), but instead "older brother," or "younger brother"; in using terms of address that always imply superiority or inferiority; in impersonality of speech; in weakness of pronoun terms; and in using prefixes and expressions which imply honour to the person addressed or to anything belonging to him, and more or less depreciation of self and what belongs to self. Yet it would seem absurd to render phrases, substantives, and the "hooks and eyes" of speech, whether Japanese or Iroquois, in what in English smacks of pomp and stilt. Especially in some of the studies of what is already nearly commonplace—studies which are of the lightest possible texture, even though decorated with abundance of felicitous phrase and grandiose diction—does this mannerism border on the absurd, while in metrical sentences it becomes ridiculous. For example, one of several hundred instances in the children's song (p. 177) runs (italics ours):

Under the willow-tree
Sir Mandarin-duck
Being shone upon by the morning sun,
His honourable colour is dark.
If the honourable complexion be dark, &c.

'The "stories" are as tiny crystals, evaporated out of enormous bulk of mother liquid. They open great windows into popular superstition. That "Of a Promise Kept" tells how, in order to make good his word, a man who has committed harakiri sends his ghost to report. The story "Of a Promise Broken" is of a man who vows to his dying wife that he will bury a bell with her in his garden, and not marry again. Yielding to his friends, he takes a new wife, who soon hears the bell ringing in the garden, and is finally dragged out, mangled, and beheaded by the ghost of the first wife. Another is the story of prayers to the pest-god, who answers by taking the life of another person of the same name and transfusing the soul into the body of the sick girl; the convalescent becoming, according to a decree of the Court, the property of both households. Other stories are of the paintings of brutes and demons, done with such artistic genius that they turn to life. These are the commonplaces of folk-lore and art stories in "the artist nation."

'Japan not only is called the Land of the Dragon-fly, but is extraordinarily rich in varieties of the insect itself. In "picture-poems," as the author calls them—mere jets of fancy fixed in words, the measured ejaculations that note a fact—the tombo flies before the mind's eye in many a dainty conceit. The statement of such fact, in its method, shows a tender sentiment and keen appreciation, both of colour, the delicate veining of the dragon-fly's wings, and its grace and swiftness of movement. The chapter on Buddhist names of plants and animals shows how fully the faith and cult of India have become the basis of popular education and culture, touching the imagination and enriching the folk-lore. As Christianity in Europe, so Buddhism in Japan, has given a new outlook on nature and a poetic vocabulary. For example, the Japanese name of the hammer-headed shark is nembutsu-bo, or the priest who chants prayers ("Namu Amida Batsu")—with a hammer and gong. Instead of a pulpit-pounder, the devout Japanese have a prayer-banger. The modern French name of shark, according to Littré, is, as Mr. Hearn recalls, only a corruption of "requiem," implying that for the man caught by a shark there was nothing to be done but to chant his requiem.

'A long and rich chapter on the songs of Japanese children, including lullabys, shows how rich is this department of nursery lore. Among the "Studies," that of "The Case of O-Dai," a young girl, compels thought.'

Part I.—FEBRUARY 18th,

Part II.—MARCH 4th,

THE OTHERS WEEKLY.

THE MOST BEAUTIFUL AND PICTURESQUE

LIFE OF HIS MAJESTY

Also of our ever-popular Queen.

FROM CRADLE TO CROWN

By Mr. J. E. VINCENT,

AUTHOR OF THE

'Memoir to H.R.H. The Duke of Clarence and Avondale.'

(WRITTEN BY AUTHORITY.)

IT will be a most interesting and even fascinating account of our Monarch's life from Cradle to Crown. The first number will contain a reproduction of a most beautiful allegorical picture, which was produced at the time of his birth. It represents the baby with a guardian angel over him, the parents looking on, and on the other side the picture of the Crown which will be placed upon his kingly brow in June next, when people from all parts of the world will come to witness the rejoicings in connection with his Coronation.

THERE ARE HUNDREDS OF ANECDOTES, all of them interesting, many of them amusing, a great number of them never before published.

THERE ARE HUNDREDS OF INTERESTING INCIDENTS.

Quite a pleasure to read. Anyone who takes in will know far more than those who do not as to the events which have transpired between these two periods.

It goes without saying that it will be written in a loyal and respectful manner, albeit in such a popular way that the interest will be sustained from the first page to the last.

A large amount of care is being taken over the Illustrations, which will be a great feature of the work. No pains have been spared to make these of the very best.

This beautiful work, when completed, will be a pleasure and a pride in any household.

A QUESTION FOR MR. ANDREW LANG

AND OTHER AUTHORS AND CRITICS.

Is it desirable that authors, publishers, and printers should strive to attain uniformity in spelling and printing?

Mr. F. Howard Collins* has no doubt how this question should be answered, and in The Author ably advocates 'The Desirability of Standard Rules for Printing, and a Method to obtain them.' By the courteous permission of the Editor of The Author, we give Mr. Collins' (or should it be Collins's?) article on another page, as he has asked us to bring the matter to the notice of publishers, printers, booksellers, and stationers—all of whom are interested in it, for even the smallest bookseller or stationer in the most out-of-the-world country place has to get printing done occasionally.

We shall gladly do what we can to get the question discussed, but, as Mr. Collins himself points out, it is an author's question, and from over thirty years' experience of their views we think it doubtful if they want uniformity—if some books we could name had been printed with the printer's reader's modest marginal suggestions, and the author's emphatic comments on them, our view would be amply justified.

It would be interesting to have the opinion of Mr. Andrew Lang on the proposals of Mr. Collins, though he will probably suggest that as the New British Academy Royal will want something to do, the formation of an orthodox Imperial Grammar and Dictionary would be very face-saving work for the Council.

* Mr. Collins will be glad to have reports of any books or pamphlets relating to this subject. His address is Idlesleigh, Torquay.

As far as we know, our literature has not seriously suffered by the absence of an Academy and of uniformity in matters of spelling and methods of printing. Indeed, we are not sure that in some respects it has not gained by nonconformity in established usage. The drift of the age is, in our humble opinion, far too much towards one monotonous dead level of uniformity. Education is by code, sold by the yard as it were, or cut off in chunks like cheese, or pumped in as beer is pumped into barrels. Boys and girls by the million have this uniform State-made and codified mental food pumped into them until their little barrels are supposed to be full, then they are shot out into the world admirably fitted to swell the ranks of the trade unions, which destroy what little individuality may be left by their soulless rules and uniform regulations.

The other day there was serious talk of the erection by an American 'Trust' (Bubble would be a better word for it) of a Yankee sky-scraper building in the vacant space opposite Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son's in the Strand. Surely all who live, move, and have their being in London should fight against the advent of this monster of uniformity. If there is any further danger doubtless the Honourable Member for the Strand will sound a warning note.

There is probably nothing more depressing, and in time, maddening, than to have to live in absolutely uniform surroundings—it is no uncommon thing, we understand, for lift boys in America to put fathers of families out on their wrong floors—but it doesn't matter, they find a family, everything's the same, rent, rates, taxes, gas bill, and babies.

Are the French any happier for having a standard uniform national Dictionary? Who can think so, since it removed one of the crowning mercies of life, a never-ending, ever-varying theme for discussion, disputation, and vituperation?

'I protest,' says Dr. J. A. H. Murray, the learned editor of the 'New English Dictionary,' 'I protest strongly against the vulgar and unscholarly habit of omitting it.' It does not matter what 'it' is for the moment, but it shows how humdrum and monotonous life would become if there were no two opinions as to what is unscholarly and vulgar.

But we may as well give the particular instance, the omission the Dr. protests against is that of e in 'abridgement,' † Should it be farther? The late Mr. R. D. Blackmore had quite a spite against 'further.'—Ed. P.C.

'judgement,' 'acknowledgement,' &c., as being 'against all analogy, etymology, and orthoëpy, since elsewhere g is hard in English, when not followed by e or i.' Surely it is the d preceding it which makes it soft, for it is hard enough in gear, geese, get.

This single instance is sufficient to show the difficulties in the way of carrying out the proposals of Mr. Collins; for if it is 'ignorant,' 'unscholarly,' and 'vulgar' to spell 'judgment' without the e, then—for Shakespeare, Locke, Addison, Milton, Pope, and Dr. Johnson, and other makers of the English language all spell it without the e.

'O judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason.'

Webster's invaluable 'International Dictionary of the English Language,' published here by Messrs. George Bell & Sons, points out that in England 'judgment, abridgment, lodgment, &c.,' are sometimes printed with the 'e.'

Then there is 'Marquis'—the Times would indeed be out of joint if it appeared as anything but 'Marquess' in its columns, Sam Weller spelled, or spelt, it 'Markis'—and so did Chaucer.

Absolute uniformity seems to be abhorred by Nature quite as much as the proverbial vacuum, but that is no reason why errors, if they are errors, should not be corrected, whether in spelling or printing. We notice that The Author puts a quite unnecessary (and ugly) full-stop after its name on its title-page and on the top of every page.

Our invaluable Printer's Reader queries the word 'unnecessary,' showing he does not agree with us; but we still think there is nothing more unsightly. It is all a matter of taste—so many men, so many minds—and we hope it always will be.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Messrs. James Finch & Co., 33 Paternoster Row, whose re-issue of the illustrated edition of Green's 'Short History of the English People' we have before referred to, have sent us a specimen of the binding in attractive art linen, 'specially sewn and forwarded.' They also do the four volumes in half and whole leather. There are 1,400 illustrations in this edition, which is, of course, published by arrangement with Messrs. Macmillan.

Mr. E. Marston, who last year published a volume under the title of 'Sketches of Booksellers of Other Days,' has now in the press a volume similar in style and general get-up, under the title of 'Sketches of Some Booksellers of the Time of Doctor Johnson.' Some of these sketches have already appeared in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, but they have been considerably expanded and several others added which will appear in the new volume for the first time. The writer says in his preface: 'I have endeavoured in every case to give the salient points in the story of each man's life, and in pursuit of the needful material I am greatly indebted to that learned and genial old literary gossip John Nichols, as well as to the immortal Boswell and to Doctor Johnson himself; but for these authorities very little indeed would have been known of the Booksellers of the Eighteenth Century.' Mr. E. M. entered on his 78th year yesterday with the good wishes of a host of friends.

Mr. Archibald Colquhoun's new work, 'The Mastery of the Pacific,' will be published on February 20 by Mr. William Heinemann. It is partly the result of an eight months' journey, and contains a detailed account of the domains of the various Powers in the Pacific and the problems that beset them. It appears at an opportune moment, as public attention is largely turned towards the oversea Dominions of Australasia and Canada, as well as towards our new ally, Japan. The United States in the Philippines, Holland in Netherlands India, Germany, Russia, and France in their various spheres, are all described from first-hand knowledge, and the book contains a wide range of special photographs, some sketches, and newly-drawn maps. Mr. Colquhoun has done splendid work in the interests of our empire during the past quarter of a century.

We are glad to see that the New York Nation says 'Lord Cranborne's statement in the House of Commons is absolutely conclusive on the subject of the friendly service which England rendered the United States on the eve of the Spanish war. The fact is officially established that it was England who was our best friend in a national emergency, and it should, for many long years to come, quiet, for very shame, the raging of our Anglophobes.'

Messrs. Methuen are about to issue 'A Short History of the British in India,' by A. D. Innes, Author of 'Britain and her Rivals in the Eighteenth Century.' It is an account of the development of the power of the British in India, a narrative of the events, and a study of their causes and their effects, from the birth of the East India Company to its decease.

Her Majesty the Queen recently graciously thanked Mr. Albert Broadbent, of 19 Oxford Street, Manchester, for a set of his 'Treasury of Consolation,' and Treasuries from the poetry of Philip James Bailey, H. S. Sutton, and Mackenzie Bell respectively. Their Majesties must be getting quite a 'Free Library.'

The Tatler for February 5 contains some account by Mr. R. B. Marston of the most extraordinary work ever published on the Shakespeare-Bacon question, entitled 'Die Kunst des Pseudonyms,' by Edwin Bormann.

It is only fair to Mr. Marston to point out that the title of his article was not given to it by him. It has offended some Baconians; what he had put could have given no offence at all. There are also one or two errors in the article, which only pretends to give a slight idea of the extraordinary discoveries which Herr Bormann thinks he has made—viz. that Bacon's name is to be found on nearly all the Shakespeare title-pages, either in word or picture.

On March 1 Messrs. John Dent & Co. will have ready the first number of a new illustrated monthly journal, entitled the Country. It will be edited by Dr. Harry Roberts, who is known for several open-air books, and it will deal, in a literary and interesting way, with the life, industry, and sports of the country, and all rural matters in general. The following are a few of the contributions to the first number: 'Unfamiliar Flowers,' by the Hon. Mrs. Earle; 'The Farm Sale,' by Charles Marriott; 'Midwinter Musings,' by the Marquess of Granby; 'The Garden which was not,' by 'Zack'; 'Spring Salmon Fishing,' by R. B. Marston; 'Notes from the Royal Gardens,' by John Dunn, of Windsor; 'The Language of Birds,' by E. Kay Robinson. The illustrations will be both numerous and artistic, in the first issue including a full-page portrait of Dean Hole, a drawing of the moat of Moreton Hall by Herbert Railton, and some thirty others.

Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish immediately in book form the lecture delivered to the Royal Institution by Mr. H. G. Wells on January 24 last, entitled 'The Discovery of the Future'; also an account of the letter 'h,' with its importance, its history, and its uses, under the title 'The Aspirate, or the use of the letter "H" in English, Latin, Greek, and Gaelic.'

We are informed officially that the Pall Mall Magazine for March will contain 'Mrs. Gallup's Reply to her Critics in the Shakespeare-Bacon Controversy,' and will be published on Tuesday, February 18.

Messrs. Blackie & Son have in preparation a new novel by Miss Ethel F. Heddle, 'A Mystery of St. Rule's.' Miss Heddle writes from the inside in presenting the 'human comedy' of a Scotch University city. For St. Rule's read St. Andrews.

'Modesty almost restrains us from mentioning an article in the London PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR of January 11, very flattering to the Nation as a journal of the class to which it belongs. The praise, however, both precedes and follows a reproach of "anti-English bias" on the political side, seemingly not without some reference to our indisposition to approve of the war in South Africa. This bias, moreover, is detected in our recent review (No. 1904) of Miss Meakin's 'Ribbon of Iron'—an account of the Siberian Railway —in which we alleged aggression on the part of the Chinese in the outbreak at Blagovestchensk on July 14, 1900, for which they suffered so terribly at the hands of the frenzied Russians. But the editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR might have read a similar statement in the letter of our special correspondent, Prof. G. Frederick Wright, of Oberlin, published in the Nation of September 27, 1900, who came upon the scene when the Amur was still "fairly black" with Chinese bodies. He did not justify the slaughter committed by the Russians, but he described the peaceful and harmonious relations existing between the Cossacks and the Chinese up to the moment when the Chinese fort at Aygun "began, without warning, to fire upon passing steamboats," and presently on Blagovestchensk itself; and contended that every appearance argued against Russian intention to disturb those relations.'—New York Nation.

Messrs. Wright & Jones, of 2 Ormond Row, Chelsea, London, S.W., have just ready a 6s. novel of striking originality by a new writer, entitled 'Sordid Amok! or, a Winter Holiday among the People-Makers of the World.'

Mr. Edmund G. Gardner has hitherto confined his attentions to Dante and his times, and will be known to most readers in this connection. He has now, however, written an historical novel, which Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. will publish. Its title is 'Desiderio: an Episode of the Renaissance,' and the story is described by the author as 'a study of certain phases of Renaissance thought, an attempt to trace a soul's progress in an epoch which is, to me at least, the most fascinating in the history of mankind.'

The February number of Messrs. Methuen's 'Sixpenny Novelist,' being the twenty-sixth volume of that series, is 'Kitty Alone,' by Mr. Baring-Gould. This charming story has already passed through several editions in its six-shilling form.

Mr. Jerome K. Jerome's new story, 'Paul Kelter,' commenced in last week's To-Day. It is the story of 'a very ordinary lad, who lived with very ordinary folk, in a modern London street, and who grew up to be a very ordinary sort of man, loving a little, and grieving a little, helping a few and harming a few, struggling and failing and hoping.'

The 'Greenback Library of Fiction'—a series for the literary public. Under this title Messrs. Duckworth announce a series of new 1s. 6d. fiction, the aim of which is to include work of a standard to interest the more critical and intelligent section of the reading public. Translations of new Continental fiction will be included. The first volume is 'Twenty-six Men and a Girl,' by Maxim Gorky; the second, 'El Ombú,' by W. H. Hudson.

Messrs. W. Thacker & Co. hope to have stock of 'Under Eastern Skies,' by 'Mimosa,' very shortly. They are now in a position to supply copies of 'The Transport of Horses by Sea,' by Veterinary-Lieut. E. E. Martin (Army Veterinary Department). This little volume has been very favourably received by the Government, who have ordered a number of copies. 'The Life of General Claude Martin,' Major-General in the Army of the Hon. East India Company, by S. C. Hill, B.A. &c., is also nearly ready.

Messrs. Methuen have just issued 'Ecthesis Chronica,' edited by Professor Sp. Lambros, in their 'Byzantine Texts.' The value and importance of this series have been recognised by all competent scholars.

The 'Poems' and 'Plays' of Oliver Goldsmith, edited by Mr. Austin Dobson, will form the next two volumes of Messrs. Dent's 'Temple Classics.'

In conversation with an American publisher recently, we asked whether the boom in business there showed signs of lasting; he said it did, but that there was an undercurrent of disquietude due to the monster Trust movement; the payment of a 10 per cent. dividend by the Steel Trust had somewhat restored confidence, but there was an uneasy feeling in the States that sooner or later 'Trust' would 'Bust.'

'For my part, democrat as I am, I would hail with delight an edict from some competent authority excluding every girl at once from school as soon as she begins to show symptoms of waning health. This company of physically degenerate young women sent out from school every year to be teachers and mothers of children may well make us tremble for the future of our country.' We are sorry for the necessity of such a note as this, by Educational Supt. E. Gay, in the Canada Educational Monthly for January.

'Compelled Frailty' is the title of an interesting little essay by Mr. H. Schütz Wilson on St. Paul's text on 'The evil that I would not that do I; the good that I would I do not.' It is published by Messrs. Bickers & Son, Leicester Square.

The Rev. J. Stephenson's book, 'The Chief Truths of the Christian Faith,' is an attempt to present in a clear and popular form the main truths of the Faith. The book is intended for lay workers in the Church, for educated parents, and for teachers generally. It states and explains the beliefs by which Christians live. Messrs. Methuen are issuing the work.

What is publishing coming to in the States? 'The Dodge Publishing Company, of 40 West 13th Street, has issued a circular offering to give a prize of $100 to amateur photographers for a series of photographs to illustrate "How to Cook Husbands." The latter book, by the way, is in its 8th edition. The Company lives up to its name anyway.

The Right Hon. Lord Monckswell has consented to preside at the 63rd Anniversary Dinner in aid of the funds of the News-vendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution, on Wednesday, May 7.

Messrs. Methuen have just added H. F. Cary's translation of 'The Paradise of Dante' to their 'Little Library.' It is edited and revised by Dr. Paget Toynbee.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. will publish immediately a 'Primer of Physiology,' by Dr. Alex. Hill, illustrated with numerous diagrams.

Collectors of 'Shakesperiana' ought not to miss a little volume entitled 'Shakespeare's Insomnia and the Causes thereof,' by Franklin H. Head, published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

A meeting of the Society of Public Librarians was held at the Limehouse Public Library on Wednesday evening, February 5, 1902, when Mr. G. H. McCall, Librarian, read a paper entitled 'Literature and Art: a Parallel.'

'The Autocrats,' by Mr. Charles K. Lush, is a story of political life in America. It has had a great success in the United States, and gives a vivid description of the methods of the modern politician. Messrs. Methuen are publishing it.

NOTES FROM ABROAD.

Attention was called in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, February 1, to the prize diplomas of the Paris Exhibition of two years ago. The other day we were told that the diplomas and medals granted to exhibitors were ready for distribution on January 17, 1902. According to the Paris Figaro, however, 110,000 diplomas, but only half the necessary quantity of medals, that is 15,000, were delivered on that day. The Figaro adds that the exhibitors may well be satisfied that they are already in receipt of their medals and parchments, for the exhibitors of 1867 are still waiting for theirs!

Carlyle wrote: 'The Age of Romance has not ceased; it never ceases.' This dictum seems to be as true of books as of men. For we find it stated in an advertisement of the French translation of 'Love Letters of an English-woman' that 200,000 copies of the original English edition were sold within three weeks of its publication late in November 1900, and that it was constantly reprinted until May 1901, the sale attaining the astonishing number of more than 500,000 copies! We hope for Mr. John Murray's sake these figures are under-estimates.

The programme of the centenary of the birth of Victor Hugo, to be celebrated on Wednesday, February 26, at the Pantheon, when President Loubet, the Ministers, and other dignitaries will be present, comprises: a speech delivered by the Minister of Education, M. Georges Leygues, in the name of the Government; a speech by a member and in the name of the French Academy; pieces of music executed by the orchestras of the Society of Concerts and of the Republican Guard, and of choruses sung by the pupils of the Conservatory of Music, and extracts from the great writer's works will be recited by actors of the Comédie Française.

On the same day the monument, consisting of a colossal statue of Victor Hugo with its subsidiary figures by the sculptor Barrias, erected in front of the church of St. Honoré d'Eylau, will be inaugurated. The cost is 250,000 francs, which sum was to have been raised by a public subscription, but only 110,000 francs were collected. M. Paul Meurice, Hugo's literary executor, appears to have succeeded in finding the wanting 140,000 francs.

The municipality of Paris is organising another popular celebration of the centenary at a cost of from 200,000 to 300,000 francs, but the programme is too long for our columns.

THE ROYAL TOUR.*

In this book Mr. Knight has made no alteration in his record of the Royal Tour except in omitting details of ceremonies &c. He preserves his first impressions, and all that he had written concerning 'the spirit which prompted those warm welcomes to our future King and Queen; the unmistakable proofs that were presented to us of the ardent loyalty, patriotism, and imperialism of our colonies; the many reasons why the inhabitants of these isles should entertain the warmest friendship for their kin beyond the seas, know and appreciate them better, and take a keener interest in the far distant lands that they inhabit.' This is excellent counsel for 'old folks at home,' who are sometimes lamentably ignorant of our colonies and colonists. It was a wise and kindly thought of our late lamented Queen, and eminently characteristic of her as the loving mother of all her subjects, that she prescribed the Royal Tour of which this book affords so bright and picturesque an account. The author pays frequent tributes of praise to their Royal Highnesses for the tact, grace, and unweariedness displayed by them in the performance of their exacting task. He attributes the unqualified success of the Royal Progress mainly to their Royal Highnesses' personal qualities, and to the keenness thrown by the Duke himself into his many arduous duties, and says: 'The nation will certainly profit later from the journey of her future King.' Now that their Royal Highnesses have so gracefully and so successfully shown throughout the Empire their appreciation of the loyalty of our colonial fellow-subjects, let Englishmen in general, as far as in their power, cherish and reciprocate colonial goodwill, and never forget the help in time of need rendered by colonials to the Mother Country. Ignorance of our colonial possessions might have excused thirty years ago the then too general indifference to colonial interests; but this cannot and ought not to be pleaded now, although we continually hear people say they have no time to read geographical books. The book before us takes little time in the reading, and he must be a dullard indeed who can read it without deriving instruction and relaxation from its perusal.

* From Messrs. LONGMANS, GREEN & Co.—'With the Royal Tour: a Narrative of the Recent Tour of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York through Greater Britain, including His Royal Highness's Speech delivered at the Guildhall on December 5, 1901.' By E. F. Knight. With 16 Illustrations and a Map.

Readers may at least learn from it that there are no Little Englanders and no pro-Boers in the colonies. Our author says: 'I met not a single pro-Boer in the course of the tour. Our colonists trust us once more; but quickly could Great Britain alienate them all were she to neglect her duty to a single colony.' Neither pains nor expense have been spared in the production of this handsome volume, which ought to be in the hands of every citizen of the British Empire.

HUTCHINSON'S 1902 AUSTRALIAN ALMANACK.

We are glad to receive a copy of the forty-third annual issue of this useful almanack, which is published by Mr. M. L. Hutchinson, of Melbourne. Mr. Hutchinson is one of the most influential booksellers of Australia. The almanack is nicely printed and full of most useful information, of course chiefly of interest to Australians, although, unless the snakes of Australia are peculiar in their bites, this about their bites would be useful anywhere:—

Snake-bites.—An easy diagnosis of snake-bite, apparently not generally known, even by the faculty, is thus given in Krefft's 'Snakes of Australia': Innocuous snakes, when they bite, leave marks thus:

Venomous snakes, when they bite, leave two punctures only, thus:

DESIRABILITY OF STANDARD RULES FOR PRINTING, AND A METHOD TO OBTAIN THEM.

From the 'AUTHOR,' by permission.

The Committee of the Society of Authors have requested me to put together a few suggestions upon 'The Desirability of Standard Rules for Printing, and a Method to obtain them,' so as to gauge the interest of the members in the question, and to enable an opinion to be formed as to the advisability, or not, of thoroughly investigating the whole question, and, if possible, of formulating such a set of rules. This request came in reply to a suggestion of mine that it was very desirable, and distinctly within the province of the Society, to formulate such a standard for the guidance of authors, editors, publishers, compositors, readers, and, in fact, all connected with the making of books.

As a compositor would say, the question is to see if the 'customs of the house' in each printing establishment could not, by a little give and take, here and there, be made into one uniform set of rules in black and white, to be followed by all.

At the present time, one may say, that if exactly the same copy be sent, without special instructions, to a dozen different printers, the resulting proofs will all differ in some particular. They may differ in punctuation; in the use of large and small capitals; in spelling, especially the suffixes 'ise' and 'ize'; in placing the hyphen in divided words; in contractions of words; in the use of numerals; in italicising anglicised foreign words; in the printing of authorities mentioned, or titles quoted; in spacing; and, in fact, in many ways too numerous to mention. This means, in short, that as one method of printing must be right, all, or all but one, of the proofs will be wrong.

In order to see if this divergence of practice could not be done away with, I recently wrote to some dozen of the leading printers as to the 'customs of the house' in their particular establishments, and the possibility of evolving a standard set of rules. With two or three exceptions they wrote that they had no printed rules, but worked in accordance with their own unwritten laws.

All are agreed upon the great importance of typographical uniformity, and would apparently welcome any thoroughly good set of rules could one be formed and acknowledged by the majority of authors. For, as they say, nothing can be done in this matter without their concurrence. The great trouble at present arises from each author wanting some one particular detail varied, because in many cases he is evidently in doubt as to how it should be printed, for he can refer to no acknowledged authority. As one very well-known firm writes me, an author frequently insists on having his own MS. 'accurately copied,' notwithstanding that the same word is spelt in two or three different ways on the same page!

In fact, I may say that the underlying truth of all the replies is that nothing can be done without first of all getting the authors to come to some common understanding among themselves. A proof, as it seems to me, that the matter is most distinctly within the province of our Society, and one which it would well repay all our members to give a helping hand to investigate, so that it may be put upon a sound and lasting basis.

To come now to a consideration of the practical work required, the great question arises, are any of the printed rules now used by the two or three separate printers referred to sufficiently good to be adopted en bloc; are they good only to serve as a foundation for our work; or, must a completely new set be made?

I venture to say that the only rules known to me which can in any way be considered worthy of adoption, or even discussion, are, as the title-page says, the 'Rules for the Compositors and Readers employed at the Clarendon Press, Oxford, compiled by Horace Hart, M.A., printer to the University of Oxford. The English spellings revised by Dr. J. A. H. Murray and Mr. Henry Bradley, Editors of the "New English Dictionary." Oxford, 1901.'

In order that any member of the Society of Authors may make acquaintance with these rules, Mr. Hart has most kindly fallen in with a suggestion which Mr. Thring made to me, and sent gratis to the Secretary a batch of these 'Rules' so that any member interested in this subject—and all should be—may obtain a copy by sending a post card to 39 Old Queen Street, S.W., asking for one to be sent to him.

I desire here to express my personal thanks to Mr. Hart for his courtesy in this matter, and for the trouble he has taken in what has been to me an interesting correspondence. In fact, whatever result we may arrive at, I feel that the thanks of the Society are due to him for the help he has given, and for supplying so generously copies of his work, which is truly priceless from the fact that it is only 'privately printed,' and therefore has no price!

May I ask all those who have any wish to see books more correctly printed in the future than in the past, and who take sufficient interest in their own work to desire it to be at least accurately printed, to obtain a copy, to read it over carefully, and to forward to me a list of queries, suggestions, and so forth? As it is only by collating a mass of such opinions that reliable and lasting progress can be hoped for.

I should like to have sent to me at Iddesleigh, Torquay, as many answers as possible to these questions:—

(1) Do the 'Rules' meet with the entire approval of the member; and would he be willing for his future work to be printed in accordance with them? If not, (2) the points of disagreement; and if possible, (3) the reasons for them; and (4) the specific alterations and additions desired.

If members will favour me with some considerable number of replies, I will investigate and tabulate them, and publish the results and inferences from them, in a future number of the Author.

It may be as well here to point out that Mr. Hart's Rules having passed through eleven editions at the Oxford University Press, and also having been reprinted by others—apparently without his permission—have a character which shows them to be of considerable use and standing.

I will now, for those who may not know them, give a brief summary of this small pamphlet. Small, for the rules are contained in twenty-one pages—three and a-half by five inches—of readable type.

The first seven pages deal with the spelling of words which have two or more forms. A rule is given whether the ending 'able' is to have an 'e,' or not, preceding: such as movable, changeable, &c. Then follows a list of thirty words spelt with the final 'ise,' and a much longer one of those with the suffix 'ize': the spelling here being founded on the 'New English Dictionary.' A rule for placing 'e' before the termination 'ment'; and four pages of words the spelling of which is far from uniform in ordinary usage, as enclose, insure. The use of the apostrophe in the possessive case. A list of those words of foreign origin which have, by constant use, become anglicised and should not therefore be printed in italics, as vice versa: followed by a list of those which should, as en masse. And the use of 'a' or 'an' before vowels.

After spelling we come to the proper forms for such contracted words as ain't, Exod., &c. Rules for the printing of poetry, and a couple of pages dealing with the use of the hyphen, with nouns, adjectives, adverbs, and words with one or more accents.

Capital letters are 'to be avoided as much as possible, but to be used in the following and similar cases.' With a page of directions: and also illustrations for the use of small capitals.

The division of English words, when they must be divided, is upon the principle 'that the part of the word left at the end of the line should suggest the part carried over.' Thus, happiness, not hap-piness. (This section should apparently be included in the one dealing with the hyphen.)

The hints—they cannot be called rules—upon punctuation are few, and, many would say, could with advantage be expanded.

The remark that the titles of books are frequently printed now in italics, instead of inverted commas, and 'must be determined by the directions given with the copy,' lacks in a marked degree that 'light and leading' which generally characterises Mr. Hart's remarks.

After a few more words on spacing, italics, figures and numerals, we come to the appendices: I., written by Mr. H. Stuart Jones on the division of Greek words; and II., by Prof. Robinson Ellis on that of Latin words.

It will be seen from the foregoing that the 'Rules' are in the form known to librarians as a 'classified catalogue.' In other words, one has to know the contents of the book thoroughly before being able to refer to the remarks upon any one particular word. The advantages of this classification of matter in the present instance appear to me very open to question. An alphabetic arrangement would enormously increase facility of reference, and would, I think, be a great advantage in many ways, as it would enable any question arising to be as quickly settled by those quite ignorant as by those thoroughly conversant with the book. In the case of authors, whom we are at present considering, the advantage would be very great indeed, for few of them would have the time, or inclination, to learn the whole book by heart, and even if they had would, I imagine, more readily acquire the knowledge if arranged in this way.

To show the advantages of this arrangement I have extracted all those entries which would come under the letter 'A,' and here append them in alphabetic order:—

A: the article, not to end a line.
 Abundance: if necessary divide thus.
 Act: initial capital when referring to Act of Parliament, or Acts of a play.
 Acts: scriptural book of the.
 Advertise.
 A.D.: (Anno Domini) to be in small caps.
 Advise.
 Ad. loc.: not italics.
 ae: (the digraph) should be separate in Latin and Greek words, as Aeneid, Aeschylus, Caesar, and in English as mediaeval. In old English names, and in French, they should not be separated, Ælfred, Cædmon.
 Aërial.

 A.H.: (Anno Hegira) small caps.
 Aide de camp: not italics.
 Albumen.
 Alkalize.
 Almanac.
 A.M. (Anno Mundi) to be small caps.
 a.m. (ante meridiem) lower case, not caps.
 Amour propre: italics.
 Analyse.
 Ancien régime: italics.
 Anathematize.
 Anatomize.
 Anglicé: italics.
 Anglicize.
 An heir.
 An herb.
 — heroic.
 — historical.
 — honest.
 — honour, -able.
 — hotel.
 — hour, -glass.
 Ankle.
 Anybody.
 Any one.
 Anything.
 Anywhere.
 Apologise.
 Apophthegm.
 Apostasy.
 Apostrophize.
 Appanage.
 Apple-tree: with hyphen.
 Apprise: (to inform).
 Apprise: (to appraise).
 A priori: italics.
 A propos: italics.
 Armchair: no hyphen.
 Artisan.
 Ascendancy.
 Atmosphere: when necessary.
 A unanimous.
 A uniform.
 A union.
 A universal.
 A useful.
 A usurper.
 Authorities: at the end of quotations or notes thus:
 HOMER Odyssey ii. 15,
 but print HOR. Carm. ii.
 14. 2; HOM. Od. iv. 272.
 Authorize.
 Ay: always.
 Aye: (yes—'the ayes have it').

Those who already know these 'Rules' will, I think, agree that the foregoing arrangement is the better one. If Mr. Hart would arrange a new edition upon these lines we should, I think, have much to be thankful for. And as helping towards this end I have offered to supply him with the necessary 'copy,' if it should meet with his approval.

May I repeat, in conclusion, the request already made, that every member of the Society should send a post card to the Secretary, 39 Old Queen Street, S.W., for a copy of Mr. Hart's 'Rules,' and should forward to me for tabulation at Idlesleigh, Torquay, replies to the four questions asked in this article?

To those who will thus lend their aid in developing typographical uniformity, I offer my thanks.

F. HOWARD COLLINS.

A FATAL NEWSPAPER POLICY.

We recently pointed out to one of the proprietors of a prosperous newspaper property some obvious errors which had appeared—i.e. they were obvious to anyone who had any knowledge of the special subject. His reply was to this effect:

'The blunders were awful, but I think it is a fatal newspaper policy ever to correct yourself.'

We should have thought that in the long run a policy of hushing up blunders would have been far more fatal than the frank admission of error. It may be weak to have erred, but it is weaker not to acknowledge it.

Letters to the Editor

[We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our Correspondents.]

'MRS. GALLUP'S BAD HISTORY.'

DEAR SIR,—I am obliged to Mr. Stronach for his correction, and regret that my gift to the Baconians has proved so valueless. The slip did not, of course, affect my argument on the main theme. It is due to my having unguardedly quoted Beaumont from the old Corpus of 'The Works of the English Poets, from Chaucer to Cowper' (1810), in which the verses in question are erroneously assigned to Beaumont.

I am, yours very faithfully,

New College, Oxford: | ROBERT S. RAIT.
 Feb. 8, 1902.

SIR,—With reference to Mr. George Stronach's letter in your issue of the 8th instant, I fail to see how any argument can be founded on Mr. Rait's slip, which is obviously due to the fact that Beaumont is mentioned in the second line of the 'Elegy on Shakespeare.' Whether Beaumont or Basse is the author of the 'Elegy,' the value of Mr. Rait's amiable chaff is not affected.

Your well-informed printer's reader is of course perfectly right in attributing the lines to William Basse, the dates of whose birth and death are, however, incorrect. The researches of Mr. Warwick Bond show that he was probably born about 1583, and that the date of his death must be placed after 1651, but before 1657. The 'Elegy on Shakespeare' was first printed, apparently by mistake, in the first edition of Downe's 'Poems,' 1633, page 165 (misprinted 149), but, the error having been discovered, it was dropped out of the succeeding editions. Several versions of it exist in manuscript, the best being contained in the MS. collection of poems in the handwriting of the poet William Browne, now in the British Museum (Lansdowne MSS. 777, fo. 67b). As Mr. Rait misquotes a line of the 'Elegy,' I venture to subjoin a copy in modern English spelling from this authoritative manuscript:—

'Renowned Spenser, lie a thought more nigh
 To learned Chaucer, and rare Beaumont lie
 A little nearer Spenser, to make room
 For Shakespeare in your threefold, fourfold tomb.
 To lodge all four in one bed make a shift
 Until Doomsday, for hardly will a fifth
 Betwixt this day and that by Fate be slain,
 For whom your curtains may be drawn again.
 If your precedency in death doth bar
 A fourth place in your sacred sepulchre,
 Under this carved marble of thine own,
 Sleep, rare tragedian, Shakespeare, sleep alone;
 Thy unmolested peace, unshared cave,
 Possess as Lord, not Tenant, of thy grave,
 That unto us and others it may be Honour hereafter to be laid by thee.'

Mr. Stronach is mistaken, I may add, in saying that the lines are not in Dr. Ingleby's 'Shakespeare's Centurie of Praise.' They will be found in Miss L. Toulmin Smith's edition of that work, published by the New Shakespeare Society in 1879, pp. 136–139. The first three lines may be compared with those of Ben Jonson's verses prefixed to the First Folio:—

'My Shakespeare, rise; I will not lodge thee by Chaucer, or Spenser, or bid Beaumont lie
 A little further, to make thee a room,' &c.

CRITICISM FROM A CASUAL COLONIAL.

SIR,—After living abroad for some years I am revisiting England, driven thereto by a war proceeding in S. Africa, of which you may have heard, albeit not always associated (thanks to the censor) with the publishing trade. Some months ago I 'discovered' the 'P. C.,' and have since been an interested and profited peruser. I have enjoyed immensely the engaging candour of your recent confessions, followed up by your article on the 'Puff Preliminary,' which strikes me as delightful. Now that you have set the example of this new rôle (or rule) it is to be hoped your contemporaries will follow. Thanks also for your running comments (I had almost said 'Galluping,' but I gather from the Athenæum that any departure from the ponderous is not in good literary taste) on the Baconian cypher controversy. But it is not on these matters I specially wish to write. I read your 'Notices of Books' carefully. If peradventure I may discover something that will suit my present inquiring condition of mind: you know it is such an advantage to have something more than the title to guide one; and your notes are sometimes quite enlightening, not to say enlivening. But why do you never mention the price? Your 'Publications of the Week' is an excellent feature, but a careless colonial has not always back records to his hand; nor does he, perhaps, treasure them up with the care they deserve. I can assure you that the price is a consideration to the general reader, my limit being 5s. (or), but dare not take the risk of ordering for fear of finding the item comes to 10s. 6d. net. And no one ever yet, I believe, went to the trouble of first writing to a publisher to 'know the price'; hence you realise at once the loss to your own particular clients! Now take that book to which you refer in elated tones, 'The Eternal Doubt,' by Agnos Scrump. Your remark that 'the author had ventured where angels feared to tread' determined me to go right in and buy that work—but the price, the price? Now can you oblige by in future slipping in this item, and so render invaluable aid to many, including

A CASUAL COLONIAL?

[We are much obliged to our correspondent, and will not beat about the bush in answering his question. With some honourable exceptions—most honourable from our point of view—publishers do not support their Trade Organ—the official organ of the Publishers' Association—as they ought to; if they did we could improve it in many ways. Many of them refuse to pay for a single advertisement, although they bombard us with puffs about their books. We already, at considerable expense, give full particulars of the size, price &c., of new books every week; if we give the price &c. again when noticing the book, the publisher may say—as indeed some have been unfair enough to say—'You give us such good free advertisement that we will put our paid advertisement into some "purely literary organ," or other semi-extinct volcano.—Ed.]

A NOTE OF SERIOUSNESS.

DEAR SIR,—Although you pretend to treat the subject of the leading article in your last issue in what might be termed a flippant manner, nevertheless I think I can discern running through the same a note of seriousness. You say that the preliminary puff is getting overdone—a statement I entirely endorse; for what are puffs unless they are disguised advts. ? and who are responsible for such puffs in the daily and weekly journals unless it is the correspondents attached to various papers? To know a man on the staff of a paper is a sure road to a cheap puff. Alas! it is another matter altogether if the puff is sent in to the editor in a general way, for not one in 100 appears when sent in this manner. And while we are on this subject would it not also be as well to air another grievance? As the editor of a trade journal and a publisher you must have recognised during your long career in the publishing world what excellent reviews are published by those papers who receive a large share of advts. On the other hand, how very few and far between are the reviews that appear when the publisher happens to be in the position of not being able to advertise. If a book by reason of its literary merit is worthy of notice, my contention is that no advt. should affect that review one way or the other, and I venture to say that no publishing house in London can controvert the statement that advts. absolutely command, in nine cases out of ten, a favourable review. The advertising canvassers will very often when soliciting advts. add at the same time: 'If you have any books for review, just send them to us, and we will see that they receive a notice.' Surely this is a state of things which can and should be remedied, and may we not look to you as the editor of the principal trade organ of the publishing and bookselling trade to set this matter on a proper and satisfactory basis?

I am, dear sir, yours truly,
A LONDON PUBLISHER.

[Our correspondent's statement is surely much too sweeping. After thirty years' experience we can honestly say that we do not believe a single journal in this country, whose literary opinion is worth anything, is influenced one way or the other by its advertisement department.—Ed.]

'STRICTLY ON BUSINESS LINES.'

DEAR SIR,—I am very anxious to obtain the post of a dramatic critic on a weekly paper—either London or provincial, preferably the former—and would be greatly obliged to you for your kind advice how to go to work about it. Of course, I quite understand that it would be strictly on business lines with anyone who would assist me to it. At the same time I may tell you that my social as well as professional position in the musical world will not permit of my advertising for it. I enclose this envelope for the favour of your kind answer in order to save you all possible trouble.

Believe me, yours faithfully,
(Miss) ———

St. John's Wood, N.W.
Feb. 8, 1902.

[We have referred our fair correspondent to Mr. John Lane, the Ajax of the dramatic publishers. If anything comes of it we hope he won't forget the 'strictly on business lines,' and give us a royalty on the Com. How genuinely dramatic is the idea that 'all possible trouble' can be saved by 'enclosing an envelope.'—Ed.]

NOT VISCOUNT VERULAM.

DEAR SIR,—In your issue of the 1st inst., under the above heading, Mr. G. Barnett Smith corrects you for calling Bacon 'Viscount Verulam,' which is, indeed, nearly as bad as the vulgar error of calling him 'Lord Bacon,' which was adopted by Lord Macaulay. Mr. Smith, however, is not quite correct in saying Bacon 'was created Viscount St. Albans, with the second title of Baron Verulam.' Bacon was first made Baron Verulam, and about three years later he was made Viscount St. ALBAN, not St. Albans.

Yours faithfully,
JAMES MEIKLE.

6 Lothian Gardens, Glasgow:

[Under the fine portrait in the first complete edition (folio) of Bacon's works, published at Frankfort-on-Main in 1665, he is described thus:

'Francisc. Bacon. Baro de Verulam Vice-Comes Scⁱ Albani, Summ. Angliæ Cancellarius mortuus 9 Aprilis, Anno Dñi 1626. Annoq. Actat. 66.'

Herr Edwin Bormann, of Leipzig, who gives a reproduction of this title-page, points out that it was in Germany that the first complete edition of Bacon's works was published, a fact not known even to Mr. Spedding.—Ed. P.C.]

BUREAU PERMANENT DU CONGRÈS INTERNATIONAL DES EDITEURS.

DEAR SIR,—We have sent you some time ago the list of the countries which pay a contribution to the expenses of the Permanent Office of the International Congress of Publishers. We beg you now to add Belgium to the list.

Yours truly,
MOREL, the Provisionary Administrator of the Permanent Office.

INCREASING THE UTILITY OF PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

Mr. Peter Cowell, Chief Librarian of the Liverpool Free Public Libraries, is to be congratulated on the most gratifying success which has attended his admirable idea of issuing, for the benefit of students and others, what he calls 'Hand-Lists' of books on special subjects. For instance, we have before us a 'Hand-List of Books on the Decorative Arts' in the Reference Department of the Library, and a similar brochure on the books on architecture and the building trades. These lists are models of bibliographical arrangement and admirably printed; we would suggest that in reprinting the covers a list of the various Hand-Lists should be given.

It is not at all surprising to learn from a 'prefatory note' that the distribution of these guides to the special and technical works possessed by the libraries at once caused a vastly increased demand for them.

It is quite needless to enlarge on the immense national value to our arts and industries of these admirable aids to unlocking the treasures of a public library—too often never consulted because unknown.

TRIBUTE TO THE DRUMMER, AND A GOOD DEFINITION OF A 'PROMOTER.'

The Philadelphia Times of December 16 said, editorially: 'It is not the nicest word in the language, but drummer seems to fit the man who is after business, and with Americans who like to save time it is preferable to commercial traveller. It is better than promoter, because—whether justly or unjustly we need not discuss—a promoter is generally considered as one who is after more than a legitimate profit on a legitimate transaction. The drummer gives values for favours received. And he does a great deal more than that. He is the best agent of our modern civilisation. He is the missionary of enterprise and the promulgator of knowledge. He stimulates laggard communities, supports the world's hotels, saves the railroads from annual bankruptcy, distributes the newest facts and keeps the oldest stories moving. There is in his speech some of the best action of the time. He goes to the point. He has purpose. The world's professional orators might sit at his feet with profit. And if he could only make his methods prevail in England, the pictures of the House of Lords and House of Commons would not show two-thirds of the members napping while some honourable gentleman has the floor.'

CANADIAN COPYRIGHT.

IMPORTANT STATEMENT BY THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE.

A conference on the copyright question was held on January 6 at Toronto, between David Mills, Minister of Justice, and Canadian publishers. A resolution was read which has been passed at a recent meeting of the booksellers' and stationers' section of the Toronto Board of Trade and allied interests, advocating the early passage by the Dominion Government of legislation on the lines of the Hall Caine agreement. The Minister promised careful consideration of the matter, and in the course of his address told of his interview during the fall with Mr. Chamberlain. The result of the conference with the Colonial Office had not, he said, been altogether satisfactory. The United States had an arrangement by which, when British authors got United States copyrights, the books must be printed and published in that country. A result was that, rather than have the type set on both sides of the Atlantic, it was a common thing to have it set in the United States only, and send stereo-plates to Great Britain for the British editions.

Mr. Mills said the Government had not yet committed itself to any line of action, but, speaking for himself, if the English authors refuse licenses to publish in Canada and persisted in treating this country as part of the United States in copyright matters, he thought a remedy could be found in imposing a high rate of duty upon such books coming in, as an intimation that Canada considered itself unfairly dealt with.—Publishers' Weekly.

There has been a good deal about Canadian Copyright in our columns lately. We wonder if Mr. Briggs and Mr. Morang, of Toronto, are aware that in the case of Smiles and Belford the Vice-Chancellor (in Canada) decided that the British North America Act did not give the Dominion Parliament any right to legislate on copyright questions as against the United Kingdom, but only as against the various provincial parliaments, and that this ruling was maintained by the Canadian Court of Appeal.

This judgment is of vital importance, and is not nearly so well known as it ought to be. Of course the Canadian publishers who fly the skull and cross-bones flag try to burke it.

The following letter appeared in the Toronto Globe, one of the most important papers in the Dominion:—

To the Editor of the Globe.—Are the publishers the only people who take an interest in the copyright question? What is the Canadian Society of Authors doing in the matter? Are they tired of pulling chestnuts out of the fire?

The subject really is more interesting than at first sight appears. For example, at the latest meeting of the Council of the Toronto Board of Trade, after a report of the proceedings of a meeting of the Wholesale Booksellers and Stationers' Section and allied trades had been discussed, it was resolved that 'the Council of the Toronto Board of Trade be requested to make strong representations to the Dominion Government, asking their consideration at an early date of this important question, and respectfully urging them to pass such legislation as will give effect to the draft bill already referred to, making it obligatory that a book shall be printed and bound in this country in order to secure Canadian copyright, and continue to be so printed and bound in order to retain such copyright, and that upon failure to print in Canada within a reasonable time, provision shall be made by which the Government may issue to a Canadian publisher a license to print in Canada, subject to such safeguards as will secure to the owner of such book a reasonable royalty upon his work.'

Yet in a recent number of the London Publishers' Circular I read the following paragraph:—'British copyright, as it at present exists, is one of the most wonderful things in the world. A Canadian author writes a book, he publishes it in this country, and the cost of doing so is purely nominal, and by that simple act of publication he gets absolute protection throughout the whole of the British Empire, and he also gets protection in all other countries with which we have copyright treaties. Does this mean nothing to a young, growing, and intellectual people? We can conceive nothing more calculated to hinder the intellectual development of Canada and the formation of a great literature than that her authors should be shut out from the enjoyment of full copyright throughout the empire—and that is what would happen if Canada dealt unfairly with the holders of copyright in other parts of it. Imperial Federation will never be complete if copyright throughout the empire is not uniform.

Does this mean that the English and the Canadian publishers are just a little bit at loggerheads?

Personally, I think that anybody who would look into the subject would be able to extract a good deal of fun out of it.

ARNOLD HAULTAIN.

EARTH'S SILENCES.

How dear to hearts by hurtful noises scarred

The stillness of the many-leaved trees,
The quiet of green hills, the million-starred Tranquillity of night, the endless seas
Of silence in deep wilds where nature broods
In large, serene, uninterrupted moods.

Oh, but to work as orchards work—bring forth Pink bloom, green bud, red fruit, and yellow leaf,

As noiselessly as gold proclaims its worth,
Or as the pale blade turns to russet sheaf,
Or splendid sun goes down the glowing west—
Still as forgotten memories in the breast.

How without panting effort, painful word,
Comes the enchanting miracle of snow,
Making a sleeping ocean. None have heard
Its waves, its surf, its foam, its overflow;
For unto every heart all hot and wild
It seems to say, 'Oh, hush thee, hush, my child.'

Notices of Books

From the Australian Book Co.—'Love and Longitude,' by R. Scot Skirving. Australian fiction is gradually winning its way to favour in England, and Mr. Skirving's tale of life on board the schooner 'Pandora' on the Eastern Pacific makes very good reading. It is in no way remarkable either by way of plot or literary skill; it is merely an unpretentious story of healthy outdoor life at sea, with the necessary spice of excitement to make the reader turn over the pages with interest. The hero of the book tells his adventures in the first person, and on the last page but one marries the daughter of the captain of the 'Pandora,' on which vessel he was chief mate.

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'The Life of Napoleon I.: including New Materials from the British Official Records,' by John Holland Rose, M.A., 2 vols. It would seem as if every prominent feature in Napoleon the First's character had by this time been thoroughly dissected and laid open to public view; but, apparently, in the records of the Foreign Office Mr. Rose has found fresh material for study. The attractiveness of Napoleon's personality, his masterfulness, devotion to a political ideal, and unconquerable courage are very vividly brought out in this chronicle, which throughout bears evidence of diligent research and careful treatment. What small matters often determine the course of public events! Had Charles Bonaparte, as Mr. Rose points out in treating of Napoleon's parentage and early years, adhered to the cause of Paoli as his son would have had him do, he and his wife would in all probability have shared that patriot's exile in England, and the future Emperor would thus have been born on English soil, and might possibly have carried arms against the French! This introductory chapter of Mr. Rose's work, in which he shows how the character of Napoleon was gradually built up, is exceedingly interesting, and it leads the reader to anticipate much pleasure from a perusal of succeeding portions of the biography. Nor is he at all likely to be disappointed. We are unfortunately not able in the limited space at our disposal to indicate in detail the highly painstaking and comprehensive manner in which the author describes the career of the Emperor, in many instances by his insight and research throwing fresh light on the motives that prompted Napoleon's actions; but we may at least warmly testify to the skill shown in the preparation of the work. Mr. Rose possesses a clear unaffected style, and this, taken in combination with his close study of the subject, has led to very fascinating results. Throughout the two closely-packed volumes he is ever interesting, and to some extent enlightening, and the charm of his work is heightened by numerous illustrations, including portraits of the Emperor, Madame Bonaparte, Wellington, Pauline Bonaparte, the Duc d'Enghien, General Moreau, Talleyrand, Marshal Soult, and Field-Marshal Blücher. There are also several maps and plans, battle views, &c.

From the same.—'Peter Vischer,' by Cecil Headlam, B.A. ('Handbooks of the Great Craftsmen.') As Mr. Headlam points out in his preface the history of Vischer's works, and of those of his father Hermann, and of his sons Hermann and Peter and Hans have a peculiar interest for the student of art, inasmuch as they illustrate the gradual but easily traceable passage of the German craftsmen from the style of late Gothic to that of complete neopaganism, and from the school of the northern painters and sculptors to that of the great Italian Masters successively. At one time Vischer had quite a unique position in Germany, for almost any work of art in bronze in that country was attributed to him. Then he fell into disfavour, and men, from indiscriminately praising him, passed to the other extreme, and equally disparaged him. Later a more accurate judgment was formed. Mr. Headlam's volume will be found exceedingly readable by all who are interested in plastic work, and the many illustrations add further distinction to the book.

From Messrs. Burns & Oates.—Roman Catholics, and other Catholics whose views are not limited by their church's walls, will find many beautiful thoughts in the charmingly got-up pocket volume entitled 'A Daily Thought from the Writings of the Rev. Fr. Dignam, S.J.' It bears the imprimatur of Cardinal Vaughan, and is 'humbly dedicated to the revered memory of our dear Father in Christ by his grateful children.' Defunctus adhuc loquitur. Here is a sample from one of the daily notes for November: 'No one ever despises his own work. An author loves his book, an artist his picture. God is our Author, our Artist, and He cannot bear to see anything done to spoil us. Every new beginning is registered in Heaven, and some day, when it pleases God, it will bring forth much fruit.'

From the Cambridge University Press.—'The Training of Teachers,' by S. S. Laurie, A.M., LL.D. Doctor Laurie is the author of several essays on educational topics; but, these being out of print, he has issued a selection of those papers which seemed to him 'to treat of subjects of permanent interest.' As a Professor of the University of Edinburgh he has had much practical experience of his subject, and, being widely read in the history of education, he may be treated as an authority to whom attention should be paid. His papers on 'The Training of Teachers' and 'University Training Colleges' are full of keen observation and close reasoning.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'Napoleon's Letters to Josephine, 1796-1812, for the first time Collected and Translated, with Notes, Social, Historical, and Chronological, from Contemporary Sources,' by Henry Foljambe Hall, F.R.Hist.S. Those interested in the study of the first Napoleon's character—and their number would seem of recent years to be largely increasing—will find much interesting material upon which to exercise their judgment in Mr. Hall's volume. The letters are gathered from various sources, but the principal means of supply are a work by Charles Tennant, issued by Longmans in 1824, and which contains in an appendix facsimile copies of eight letters addressed by the Emperor to Josephine in 1796, and the Didot Frères collection, published in 1833. Much of the interest of the volume lies in

Mr. Hall's explanatory notes, which evince an earnest and intimate knowledge of his subject. We can recommend the volume to all who would gain an insight into Napoleon's personality through the valuable medium of his correspondence. Several portraits are given, including one of the Emperor, and we should hardly be doing full justice to the author if we did not comment on the methodical arrangement of his work, which is quite lawyer-like in its precision.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'Venus Victrix, and other Stories,' by Helen Mathers. It is rather exceptional nowadays to take up any work of fiction relying for its interest on incident rather than character portrayal and not find that the leading theme is a murder. Accordingly two out of Miss Mathers's four stories are directly based on this event, the third treats of a supposed attempted murder, and only the fourth is free from any criminal intent. We are not quite sure that we don't like this last story the best; there are considerable touches of humour in it, and its pathos is unforced. Hardly the same can be said for 'The Mystery of No. 18,' wherein the very much hackneyed golden-haired child is made the means of softening a surly ruffian's heart, while as for 'Venus Victrix' there is little to relieve its sordid, inhuman character from beginning to end. A wretched, passion-consumed woman, lying paralysed in bed, becomes jealous of her husband and the nurse, who, indeed, were at one time engaged to be married, but through her treachery were separated; and in order to be revenged commits suicide in such way that the nurse is accused of her murder, and is sentenced to death. Miss Mathers is an experienced novelist, and naturally everything that comes from her pen has a certain attraction, but we have known her to far greater advantage than in these stories.

From Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode.—'The Grammar of Prophecy: an Attempt to Discover the Method underlying the Prophetic Scriptures,' by R. B. Girdlestone, M.A. In his preface to this interesting and scholarly work Canon Girdlestone points out that the neglect of the study of prophetic method is perhaps one cause of the great variety of opinion observable among students of prophecy, and that it may account for the fact that so many have given up the subject in despair. The first half of the book, therefore, is devoted to what may be termed a scientific consideration of the subject, in which the characteristic phenomena of prediction, the chief forms of prophetic thought and modes of prophetic utterance, and the bearing of prediction on our knowledge of the divine nature and on human free will, are investigated and discussed. Reference is then made to the most important branches of Biblical prediction. These include the promises to Abraham and to David fulfilled in Christ, the case of the Ten Tribes, the future of Israel, the second coming of Christ, the Millennium, the rise and fall of Antichrist, and the Final Judgment and that which is beyond. The volume is a valuable contribution to the study of a subject which has scarcely attracted so much attention as its importance demands. It forms the eleventh and concluding volume of 'The Bible Student's Library.'

From Messrs. Freemantle & Co.—'Some Poems by Alfred Lord Tennyson; with a Preface by Joseph Pennell treating of the Illustrators of the Sixties and an Introduction by W. Holman Hunt.' We have no need to say a word as to the poems illustrated; but of the illustrations themselves there is much of interest to be learnt from Mr. Pennell and

Mr. Holman Hunt's contributions to this handsome volume; which, for the first time, enables those who care for and can appreciate book illustrations to see what some of these illustrations were as originally drawn by the artist. For the drawings often suffered greatly at the hands of the engraver. As Mr. Pennell tells us, the artist drew on the wood; but the drawing disappeared in the engraving. When, however, photography was invented, good engravers determined to save a good drawing from destruction; and the design was photographed before the graver touched it. This then is the great advantage this edition possesses over former issues of these charming designs of Millais, Rossetti, and W. Holman Hunt; for here, wherever possible, we see reproduction of the artist's original design as well as the engraver's rendering of it. The alterations made by the graver are often very startling. We gather from Mr. Pennell's preface that this volume will be followed by other reprints on the same plan, each volume to have an introduction written by an artist who has either been associated with the work or who is in special sympathy with it. We look forward with interest to the carrying out of this scheme.

From Messrs. Gale & Polden, Ltd.—'The Army Diary and Pocket Book for 1902.' This little work affords a large amount of useful and interesting information for the army officer, a portion of which is arranged under the days of the year. The opening pages of the diary give concise particulars regarding the Royal Family, his Majesty's Ministers, Headquarter Staff of the Army, regiments and corps (with dates of going on and returning from foreign service), alterations in titles of Royal Garrison Artillery, territorial titles, volunteer regiments, and so forth, and this part has been efficiently revised and brought up to date.

From Messrs. Gay & Bird.—'Atoms and Energies,' by D. A. Murray, A.M., sometime Instructor in the Government Shogyo Oakko, Kyoto, Japan. The author states that this book does not enunciate a new theory, but is only a discussion. In dealing with the movement of atoms he has endeavoured not to postulate any new force or factors, but simply to take the energies and laws which we now know, and compute their effects in the atomic distances. 'Where the real condition in any case has been unknown, yet it is certain that one of two alternatives must be true; the one chosen has been, I believe, in every case the one equally or more probable intrinsically than the other. The field entered is new and exceedingly large; so, while not asking any leniency of criticism for the results here set forth, I would bespeak a little suspension of judgment and candid independent study along the same lines. Doubtless some or all of the conclusions here reached may have to be materially modified before a final solution is reached.' So we leave this book to those readers and physicists who have time to study it. Professor Starr, of Chicago University, says of it in his introduction, 'The subject is interesting, the point of view novel, the argument clear, the book itself satisfactory.'

From Mr. Otto Harrassowitz, Leipzig.—Centralblatt für Bibliothekswesen, Jan.-Feb. 1902. The contents of this double number are of more than ordinary interest. The first article, on the Library of Nicholas V., will at once attract the attention of bibliographers, by whom the memory of that Mæcenas of Popes, Tommaso Parentucelli, so intimately associated with the revival of learning in Italy in the fifteenth century, must necessarily be honoured. Father Joseph Hilgers, S.J., seeks to ascertain as nearly as possible the total number of Greek and Latin MSS. in the Vatican Library in the time of its founder, Pope Nicholas V. Hitherto the statements of various contemporary sources of information have been irreconcilable. Father Hilgers convincingly establishes the fact that the discrepancies are mainly due to the large number of MSS. lent to various persons, sometimes for life, and which were too often never returned! Another article of equal and perhaps of more immediate interest is that by M. Henry Harrisse, of Paris, headed 'Apocrypha Americana,' in which that learned bibliographer critically examines two decisions of American law-courts relative to an alleged forgery of the printed Spanish letter of Christopher Columbus in which he made known the discovery of America, and which was sold at an extraordinarily high price. This article, written in French, fills twenty-two pages, and is too long even for analysis in our columns, but it ought to be read by all interested in early printed books, for it enters into full details as to the methods adopted by the modern makers of old books. Other articles deal with the statistics of Prussian university libraries and with matters appertaining to library work.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'In Memoriam,' by Alfred Tennyson, with a Commentary by L. Morel, LL.D.; 'Isobel Berners,' by George Borrow, the text edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Thomas Seccombe. These are volumes in the 'Red Leather' series, of which the distinguishing features are a convenient, handy size, clear printing, good paper, and red leather binding. The present additions to the series have, editorially speaking, been excellently taken care of, and in their new dress should find support from a large number of readers.

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—'King Stork of the Netherlands: a Romance of the Early Days of the Dutch Republic,' by Albert Lee. Those who like plenty of heroic incident in their fiction are certain to be very much pleased with this novel. It recounts the adventures of a brave young Fleming, one Bertrand Blomberg, who is sent by William the Silent, Prince of Orange, on a mission to Brussels to place in the hands of the Spanish Viceroy, the Duke of Parma, certain important documents. This duty is in itself dangerous enough, but it is nothing to what follows; and on the introduction of a young and beautiful girl into the narrative, who is rescued from three Familiars of the Inquisition, thrilling event follows on thrilling event with most enjoyable rapidity. More than once Master Blomberg falls into the hands of his enemies; but each time, thanks to the good fortune that invariably attends on heroes of romance, he manages to escape. The story ends with the assassination of the Prince. On the foundation afforded by history Mr. Lee has constructed a highly eventful plot, the unfolding of which will keep the reader in a constant state of excitement.

From Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co.—'The Personal Life of the Clergy,' by Arthur W. Robinson, B.D. Nothing could be more earnest or in better keeping than these words of Mr. Robinson addressed to his fellow clerics. In the first place he speaks of the importance of his subject and the secret of influence, which does not consist so much in an imitation of what is most noticeable in the lives and practices of others, or upon external conditions of station or wealth, as in the power that emanates from a life that is lived in communion with God. He then goes on to point out the three great essentials to a truly spiritual life: penitence, prayer, and devotion to the Almighty. The dangers that lie in the way of the devout minded are secularisation, over-occupation, and depression, and these are also treated of in separate chapters. In a postscript, the author has something to say on the difficulties of the life of the clergy. 'The day has certainly gone, if ever there was such a day, when men might persuade themselves that by entering into Holy Orders they were securing an agreeable and not very arduous career. From the clergy more than from any other workers is expected self-sacrifice in devotion to their work.'

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd.—'Naval Brigades in the South African War, 1899-1900,' written by officers attached to the various brigades, and edited by Surgeon T. J. Jeans, R.N., with an introduction by Commander Charles N. Robinson, R.N. (retired). The heroic part played by the Naval Brigade in the assistance of their military comrades on land during the campaign in South Africa scarcely needs to be enlarged upon, since it is warmly recognised by every true-blooded Britisher. It is indeed difficult to speak too highly of the services rendered by this branch of our national forces. Their good humour under adverse circumstances, cheerful acceptance of any duty that might fall to their lot, and undaunted courage have earned them a name that will redound to their credit wherever the English language is spoken. No one can read these accounts of their exploits at Ladysmith, Graspan, and other places without feeling his pulse stirred, and being proud of his fellow-countrymen. The testimony to their good qualities is all the greater because it is rendered in such simple, unaffected form. There is no attempt at word painting or artistic effect, but everything is described in the most unassuming and modest of language. Following the cheery outspoken introduction of Commander Robinson, we are told of the experiences of 'The Naval Brigade in Cape Colony,' by Major A. E. Marchant and Captain W. T. C. Jones; follow the fortunes of the Brigade in their progress 'From Enslin to Bloemfontein,' as related by Surgeon T. J. Jeans; are witnesses of 'The Advance from Bloemfontein' through the graphic description of Captain Leslie O. Wilson; and accompany 'Grant's Guns North of Bloemfontein' under the guidance of Commander J. A. Fergusson. The remaining portion of the book is chiefly concerned with the doings of the Naval Brigade at Ladysmith, which receive full justice at the hands of Chief Engineer C. C. Sheen. The entire volume is bound to be read with the greatest interest, and its value is greatly enhanced by several illustrations and maps.

From the same.—'The Fighting in North China (up to the fall of Tientsin City),' by G. Gipps, midshipman, H.M.S. 'Orlando.' In this little work a plain unvarnished account, which loses nothing of force through simplicity, is given of the many lamentable disturbances that have recently occurred in North China. Such events will be well within the recollection of the reader, but derive much graphic intensity from Mr. Gipps's descriptions, which reveal the horrors of war in a clear practical fashion that is very realistic. The narrative is further aided by several illustrations and maps; and the work, as coming from one who took an actual part in the warfare, is worthy of wide circulation. It is gratifying to find a young midshipman giving such serious and able attention to his subject.

From Messrs. Luzac & Co.—'Arabic Manual: a Colloquial Handbook in the Syrian Dialect for the use of Visitors to Syria and Palestine, containing a simplified Grammar, a comprehensive English and Arabic Vocabulary, and Dialogues; the whole in English characters, carefully transliterated, the pronunciation being fully indicated,' by F. E. Crow. The sub-title of this work is so exceedingly full that there is no necessity to further indicate the character of its contents. The author has performed a somewhat onerous task with considerable skill, and no doubt this volume will be found serviceable by those about to visit Syria and Palestine, either on business or for recreation. Considering the size of the book, the vocabulary is exceptionally comprehensive.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co. Ltd.—'Insect Life: Souvenirs of a Naturalist, J. H. Fabre, D.-ès-S.,' translated from the French by the author of 'Mademoiselle Mori,' with a preface by David Sharp, M.A., F.R.S., and edited by F. Merrifield. This volume enables the English reader to make acquaintance with a naturalist who in his own country is probably only second in this particular department of work to the great Réaumur. There is a brightness and vivacity about his description of insect life that seems very powerfully to bring the actual form before us. It is said of Fabre that he is too quick to make deductions, too obstinate in the philosophical attitude he assumes, which, practically, is a refusal to recognise the argument of evolution. Be this as it may, it is impossible to read the present work without recognising the wide extent of his knowledge and the infinite observation he brings to bear upon even the elucidation of a minor characteristic. The distinctive features of the hymenoptera, with which the book is chiefly concerned, could scarcely have been presented to the reader in a more intelligible, fascinating form. The author of 'Mademoiselle Mori' may generally be complimented on the skill with which she has accomplished a rather difficult task. Fabre is by no means an easy writer to translate, and the pitfalls are many. We should also make acknowledgment of the excellent illustrations of M. Prendergast Parker.

From the same.—'Modern Business Methods,' by Frederick Hooper and James Graham. Messrs. Macmillan have issued a new edition of two excellent manuals dealing with Home and Foreign Trade respectively. They are intended for boys and young men who are just leaving school, and are anxious to learn the rules under which modern trade is conducted.

From Messrs. B. & J. F. Meehan, Gay Street, Bath.—'Famous Houses of Bath and District,' by J. F. Meehan. Probably there is no city in Great Britain of similar size that is more wealthy in its literary associations than Bath. This fact is very interestingly brought out in Mr. Meehan's volume, and the method of its arrangement still further increases the attraction of the work. The author is the fortunate possessor of a number of original drawings and rare prints representing old streets and houses in the city. These he has reproduced, and in the accompanying pages has penned an account of the distinguished people who at one time lived in them, with many a pleasant recollection and characteristic anecdote. The throng of notables is a gay and fascinating one. Foremost among them are Brinsley Sheridan and his wife, the beautiful Miss Linley; Matthews, his rival in love, who is the original of 'Bob Acres'; Beau Nash, Dr. Johnson, Jane Austen, Fanny Burney (Madame D'Arbly), Mrs. Thrale, Charles Dickens, William Pitt (Earl of Chatham), Leigh Hunt, and others. Readers will find Mr. Meehan in his description of the literary and historical associations of Bath an exceedingly agreeable companion for an unoccupied evening, and his volume is certain to arouse many pleasant recollections.

From Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons.—'The Royal Prince Readers,' Books I. and II. The great merit of these readers, which is bound to elicit the approbation of those in charge of elementary schools, lies in the suitability of their letterpress, the clearness of the printing, and the distinction of the coloured illustrations. Throughout, a careful system of graduation has been observed, each lesson almost imperceptibly leading to something a little more difficult. The general preparation of these volumes is worthy of the highest praise.

From the same.—'The Old Testament Narrative for Schools, compiled in the Words of the Authorised Version,' by Marcus Dods, M.A. The object of this work is to simplify the Old Testament for reading purposes so that it may form a simple statement of history 'freed from legal and ceremonial details, from that repetition which is so frequent in the Old Testament and so confusing to the youthful mind, and also from those genealogical and other lists which so frequently interrupt the essential historical narrative,' and, further, 'to remove everything which makes the reading aloud of considerable parts of the Scriptural books undesirable.' The author, in carrying out his work, has been guided by two principles which can scarcely fail to commend themselves to his readers. In the first place alterations have been carried out by omission alone, and, secondly, the order of the passages, verses, and even words has been rigidly adhered to. Practically the text of his volume is that of the historical books of the Old Testament with certain desirable omissions. The arrangement of the book is in sections with headings, and this will no doubt tend to its greater usefulness for teachers, pupils, and readers generally. There are also several serviceable maps and other illustrations, and the volume is suitably printed and bound for school purposes. It should, we think, be of great assistance to the young in their study of the Old Testament.

From Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd.—'The Story of Architecture,' by P. Leslie Waterhouse, M.A. ('Library of Useful Stories'). Considering the size of this little volume, it affords a wonderfully extensive survey of its subject. The book is divided into nine chapters, respectively treating of Egyptian, Greek, Etruscan, and Roman, Early Christian, Mohammedan, Romanesque, Gothic, Renaissance, and Modern Architecture. It is profusely illustrated.

From the Publishing Office, Mowbray House, Norfolk Street, W.C.—'Manual of Electrical Undertakings and Directory of Officials, 1901-1902,' compiled under the direction of Emile Garcke, M.I.E.E., F.S.S. This is the sixth annual issue of a work that is calculated to supply much useful information to those engaged in electrical work. The volume is divided into five sections. Number one treats of electric lighting, traction, and power; the second is devoted to a consideration of telegraph and telephone; the third embraces the uses of the industry as applied to manufacturing and trade; the fourth supplies a directory of officials; and the fifth contains a list of electrical companies registered since 1856, giving the year of registration and the amount of the capital. The chief impression that the ordinary reader will gather from this bulky well-edited volume is of the immense progress made by the electrical industry within recent years, the aggregate capital issued by companies in shares, debentures and loans, as well as amounts borrowed by municipalities for electrical undertakings having increased, according to this record, from £61,109,525 in 1896 to £155,184,481 in 1901-1902.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'The Dangers of Spiritualism,' by a Member of the Society of Psychical Research. That Spiritualism must be fraught with dangers seems self-evident. For, if it be a delusion, one need be wary of those professors who prey upon the credulity of its deluded votaries; but, if it be real, the necessity of trying what spirits those are with whom one may be brought en rapport is equally clear. The writer tells us that he has two objects in view in publishing this book: one is, to bear testimony to the reality and objectivity of those abnormal phenomena which have in recent years been so frequently the subject of inquiry and discussion; and the other, to draw attention to certain great dangers attending their experimental investigation, but which have not hitherto been brought to the knowledge of the thinking and inquiring public with sufficient clearness and distinctness. He adds that scarcely a week passes without these dangers being brought home to him in a very striking and practical manner. Limits of space forbid any detailed account of the strange stories contained in this book; but, if the extraordinary narrative to be found in the second chapter be not an invention or the result of hallucination, it is a most striking testimony to the very real danger of tampering with Spiritualism. The writer sums up the result of his researches by saying: 'It is a fact universally acknowledged and admitted by experienced Spiritualists that the influence of the séance-room is, on the whole, debasing, and that it tends to banish all true devotional feeling and true religion.' After this little remains to be said except to wish that this book may have the effect of preventing many persons from having anything whatever to do with Spiritualism.

From Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co., Limited.—'Stage Whispers,' by R. J. Broadbent. In this volume, dedicated by special permission to Sir Henry Irving, the author has brought together a quantity of interesting matter relating to the Stage in England. Beginning with an account of 'Royalty and the Stage,' the author traces the connection between the King and the Players from the time of Richard II. to that of King Edward VII. This is followed by an article on the 'First English Theatre,' which is succeeded by other two on 'Women on the Stage' and the 'First English Actress.' Then we are told of the emoluments of playwrights and actors in Shakespeare's time, and about the critics of his day. To these succeed an interesting account of 'Players' Benefits,' in which the Crummles troupe and Miss Snivellic's 'bespeak' are not forgotten; for, as the writer says, the life of those theatrical wayfarers as depicted by Charles Dickens was no fanciful one, and may have been suggested to the novelist by the memoirs of Tate Wilkinson. Mr. Broadbent's last three chapters treat of theatricals when George the Fourth was King; of Theatrical Scenery, and of the History of Playbills, very curious specimens of which are given. We regret to note some disfiguring errors such as 'The favour that Elizabeth bestowed upon the drama is to be accounted for its flourishing state at this period of history' (p. 14), 'We have seen how the stage has rose and fell,' &c. (p. 23). 'In after years further favours Her Majesty bestowed on the theatrical profession in first Knighthood, then plain (sic) Mr. Henry Irving, and afterwards Mr. Squire Bancroft "to the general joy,"' (p. 23). 'In tracing the history of the "First English Theatre," which it was and where it was situated,' &c. (p. 39). 'We will answer these two questions ourselves, if the reader will accompany me,' &c. (p. 39). 'To the North of Holywell Lane, the Theatre was situated and about the site of the present Deanes' Mews' (p. 40). It is unfortunate that more care was not bestowed on the reading of the proofs of a book containing such a fund of information about the Stage.

From Mr. Arthur H. Stockwell.—'Some Unique Aspects of the Baptist Position,' by Edward Carey Pike, B.A. This booklet contains a certain amount of superficial thought by no means well expressed, but it may serve to indicate to illiterate persons a few of the problems in the solution of which the Baptists have arrived at conclusions not held by the large majority of believers. Mr. Pike is an enthusiast, and seems to have at his command much varied but ill-digested information.

From Messrs. Anthony Treherne & Co., Ltd.—'A Fury in White Velvet,' by Herbert Comp-ton. Lieutenant Howard, of the Political Department, assistant to Mr. Badger, the Political Resident on the Punjab Frontier, has a difficulty with his chief anent a raid of Afghan tribesmen who captured an outpost, owing, as Mr. Badger asserted, to want of intelligence which Howard, who was away shooting, should have obtained. Howard is transferred by the Lieutenant-Governor to Juggrapore, but memorialises the Viceroy, who, after hearing him, confirms the transfer, whereupon Howard resigns his appointment. But he is engaged to be married to Edith Ponsonby, whose mother, on learning Howard's false step, decides that the engagement must terminate. As a solace for his troubles the hero resolves on a shooting and exploring journey into the heart of Asia. On the road, near the Rotang Pass, he falls in with another ex-official, Godfrey Gotch, or Shikari Gotch, who had resigned his appointment in the Woods and Forests Department because appointed to a district where there was no sport—and he was a correspondent of the Field. Gotch tells Howard that he has a commission to obtain a white or snow leopard for the Sultan, to be by him presented to the Czar. The two soon came to an understanding, in which Gotch has the advantage. His object was to catch a snow leopard, while Howard was bent on ibex shooting and exploring; still, that was no reason why he should not keep his eye open for a white leopard. The story tells how he finds one, how the finding of it affects his relations with the Shikari and others, and what is the hero's fate after encountering a series of Oriental adventures rivalling those in the 'Arabian Nights.' A story to be read and enjoyed of a long winter evening is 'A Fury in White Velvet,' which is Howard's description of the snow leopard Bijli, whose tragic end is one of the very few sad incidents in the book.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'The Mating of a Dove,' by Mary E. Mann. The Dove in question was also called Monica. We first make her acquaintance when she is about to be married to the Rev. Michael Bell, and her remarks on the wedding presents are certainly not calculated to inspire respect. Monica Dove, in short, is a pretty little woman, with a thoroughly narrow, selfish nature. The poor clergyman finds out this after their marriage, but he is so infatuated with his wife that he refuses to acknowledge her faults, even to himself. In a large measure owing to her heartless indifference to his welfare, he dies. Then the big lumbering doctor, whom one would have credited with greater sense, comes forward and assists Monica in practising a very pretty piece of perfidy on her simple-minded sister, to whom the said doctor was engaged. All of which shows that Monica must have had a very taking way with her in thus ensnaring the opposite sex. We close the book with a devout hope that Dr. Richard Lambb was made as miserable as the first husband. He certainly deserved to be. All the same, we think 'The Mating of a Dove' is one of the best novels the author has ever written, and, if for no other reason than the idyllic love-making of Amy Dove and the carpenter George Grand, the book certainly deserves to be read.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co., Ltd.—'A Matter of Sentiment,' by John Strange Winter. Roger Meredith and Dick Vincent are friends in partnership in California; they discover 'oil upon the land,' and make ten thousand pounds. Meredith, the elder by twenty-two years, is addicted to sudden fits of drunkenness which seize him at long intervals; in one of these fits he attacks Dick with a revolver, and in the struggle that ensues is shot dead. Vincent returns to England, meets Mrs. Meredith, the wife of the man he has accidentally killed, and falls in love with her daughter. And so the story progresses. It is light, not too clever, and quite suitable for the class of readers for whom it was evidently written—the class who wish to find in their novels nothing that makes them think too deeply or feel too acutely.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

. In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo., royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: inch = 2½ centimetres.

THE HYMNAL COMPANION

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. Bishop E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D. (late of Exeter)

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—54 Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

NEW JAMES-MOLÉ DICTIONARY

A complete and entirely modernised Dictionary of the English and French Languages.

Published at the extremely low price of Six Shillings, in cloth.

JUST PUBLISHED.

DICTIONARY

OF THE

English & French Languages

BY

W. JAMES and A. MOLE.

Sixteenth, entirely New and Modern Edition,

COMPLETELY RE-WRITTEN AND GREATLY ENLARGED

BY

LOUIS TOLHAUSEN,

FORMER CONSUL-GENERAL OF FRANCE, OFFICIER DE LA LÉGION D'HONNEUR,

AND

ASSISTED BY E. HEYMANN, OFFICIER D'ACADÉMIE

Crown 8vo. bound in cloth, 6s.

Although the present work still bears the name of JAMES and MOLÉ, it has been, in point of fact, completely re-written by the present editors, whose names as finished scholars of the two languages will be sufficient guarantee of the soundness and excellence of the New Edition.

Among its more salient advantages are:—

1. The enlarged compass and size—1250 crown 8vo. pages of 3 columns (325 pages more than the original edition).
2. Inclusion of all phrases in general, and even in familiar use in both languages. Indication of obsolete and obsolescent words and phrases by means of an asterisk.
3. A new system of pronunciation of the words of both languages which stands unrivalled for clearness and comprehensibility. Every title-word is accompanied by a complete phonetic respelling. Key words will be found at the bottom of each page of the English-French part.
4. Careful arrangement of the work and selection of type, securing a maximum of clearness and easy reference.
5. A movable book-mark, on which the lists of abbreviations and tables of pronunciation, given at the beginning of the volume, are repeated.

The Dictionary can be had of all the principal booksellers.

MILITARY BOOKS FOR OFFICERSRegimental Duties Made Easy.

Subject 'A' for the Promotion Examinations, with references to the Official Books. By Major S. T. BANNING, 1st Bn. Royal Munster Fusiliers, p.s.c., LL.B. (Lond.); B.A., LL.D. (R.U.I.); of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law; Instructor in Tactical and Military Administration, R.M.C., and late D.A.A.G. for Instruction, Dublin District.

PART I.—Warrant and Non-Commissioned Officers to Second-Lieutenant; Second-Lieutenants, Quarter-Masters, and Riding-Masters to Lieutenant.—PART II.—Captain to Major. In 1 vol. 5s.

Company Drill Made Easy.

With Illustrations and Explanatory Notes, and Catechism; also Plan for a Company's Advanced Guard, in accordance with the latest 'Infantry Drill.' 1s. 6d.

Battalion Drill Made Easy.

(Fully Illustrated), in accordance with the latest 'Infantry Drill.' 10th Edition. 2s. 6d.

'It is so clear and simple, and leaves nothing to be imagined by the student, as every single movement in Battalion Drill is explained under all the various positions. The book merely wants to be read in order to be appreciated and admired.'—ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.

Guides and Markers' Duties in Company, Battalion, and Brigade Movements.

In accordance with the latest Infantry Drill. 10th Edition. Fully Illustrated. 2s.

Military Law Made Easy.

(Subject 'O' for the Promotion Examinations), with Appendix of Examination Papers fully answered, with references to the official books. By Major S. T. BANNING, 1st Bn. Royal Munster Fusiliers, p.s.c., LL.B. (Lond.), B.A., LL.D. (R.U.I.), of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Instructor in Military Law, R.M.C., and late D.A.A.G. for Instruction, Dublin District. 4s. 6d.

The Military Law Examiner.

Containing the Questions set at Public Examinations in Military Law, from 1890 to 1900, together with the Answers to them. By Lieut.-Col. SISSON C. PRATT, R.A. (retired). 4th Edition. Revised up to August 1900. 4s. 6d.

Studies in Practical Field Engineering.

An Aid to the Practical Examination in this Subject. By Lieut.-Col. WILKINSON J. SHAW, p.s.c., M.A., Author of 'The Elements of Modern Tactics.' Illustrated with 10 Plates. 4s.

Topography Made Easy.

A Complete Course for Officers preparing for the Staff College, Promotion, and the Militia Military Competitive Examinations. Compiled by JAMES CORBALLIS, late Royal Irish Regiment. 4s.

Tactics for Beginners.

Compiled by Capt. C. M. DE GRUYTHER, p.s.c., The Suffolk Regiment. Instructor in Tactics R. Military College. Fully Illustrated with Plates. 6s.

The Approved Text Book for Royal Military College, Camberley.

"'Tactics for Beginners,' by Captain C. M. De Gruyther, Instructor in Tactics at the Royal Military College, is just what its title would lead us to expect. The author has placed himself in the position of the student entering upon the subject for the first time, and, recognising the difficulties and stumbling blocks, has made everything easy, and laid down a firm and good ground for future study. It is all most helpful and well done. . . . The book is just what it should be, and has already been adopted as a text-book at the Royal Military College.'

ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.

Organization and Equipment Made Easy.

(Subject 'G' for the Promotion Examinations), with Appendix of Examination Papers fully answered, with references to the Official Books. By Major S. T. BANNING, 1st Bn. Royal Munster Fusiliers; p.s.c., LL.B. (Lond.), B.A., LL.D. (R.U.I.), of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Instructor in Military Administration, R.M.C., and late D.A.A.G. for Instruction, Dublin District. 4s. 6d.

Hints to Young Officers.

By an ADJUTANT. 1s.

'From first to last there is really common sense in "An Adjutant's" hints, and we have no hesitation in saying that any young officer taking up the book will not put it down again until he has read it through, it being written in a pleasant chatty style which should recommend it to those for whose benefit it has been produced.'—ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE.

THE BOODLING OF DANTE AND BACON.

[BOODLE.—Origin uncertain. United States political slang for money given in payment for votes or political influence; bribe, money, swag.—Webster's International Dictionary.]

That Bacon took bribes, or at any rate boodles, is remembered against him, but it is not so generally known that the austere Dante sinned in the same way. In a little work entitled 'Studies in Medieval and Modern History,' by Franklin H. Head (privately printed at Chicago), there is an interesting chapter entitled 'Dante's Boodling, and its Influence upon his Work.'

Mr. Head says he has made a careful study* of the documentary evidence in the indictment and trial of Dante, resulting in his banishment, which indicates that other than political offences were charged against him. In a decree dated January 1302, Boniface VIII. being then Pope, it is charged by the Court of the State of Florence against

Lord PALERMIUS DE ALÓVETIO,
DANTE ALIGHIERI, LIPPO BACCHUS, and

that they had been guilty of bribery, of receiving illicit lucre, and of exorbitant extortions in money or in goods, and they were condemned to pay a fine of 5,000 small gold florins, and were inscribed in the records of the people of Florence as forgers, falsifiers, barrators, and impostors, never after to hold office of trust or receive any privileges from the commonwealth of Florence, 'the fine being paid or not.'

* Based on the publications of the German and American Dante Societies.

In the month of March following, in another decree, Dante was condemned to perpetual banishment under penalty of being 'consumed by fire,' like one of the wretches in his own 'Inferno,' if he set foot within the territory of the Commonwealth.

Each of five witnesses against Dante stated in his evidence, as justifying his own connivance in the frauds, that Dante's excuse for taking immense sums of money was that he desired to do great things for Florence in the way of beautiful buildings and gifts to the poor.

The evidence against Dante appears to be overwhelming, and it is curious that in his case, as in that of Bacon, the world owes most of the great works with which they enriched its literature to the enforced retirement resulting from their misdeeds. Surely we may say with truth that both more than redeemed any wrong they did as mortals by the immortal heritage they left mankind.

Since writing the preceding note we have seen Mr. Paget Toynbee's work, 'Dante Alighieri,' a most charmingly got-up popular account of the poet, published by Messrs. Methuen. We should imagine from it that Mr. Toynbee has not seen the evidence referred to in Mr. Head's book as being in the possession of the American Dante Society. As Mr. Head points out, Dante made no defence, and when, many years after, he appealed to be allowed to return to Florence his appeal was rejected; that the charges were more than political in their nature seems clear from the fact that neither party in the State would trust him again.

The best attempt to whitewash Bacon (done to keep the flies off) we have seen lately is that in Mr. Geo. C. Bompas's very sober and sensible little work, entitled 'The Problem of the Shakespeare Plays,' published last Thursday by Messrs. Sampson Low. Mr. Bompas is one of the most reasonable of the Baconians; we hope to have a notice of his book in our Special Announcement Number next week.

PROPOSED BRITISH AND IRISH BOOKSELLERS' BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.

At the request of some of our readers who are deeply interested in the matter, we hope to give in an early number—possibly early next month—some interesting statistics respecting Trade Benevolent Societies and the good they do. Our view is that if any good is to result the matter will have to be taken up by the Provincial and other Booksellers' Associations. It will be for them to judge whether or not the time is ripe to move in the matter; all we can do is to give publicity to the suggestions and statistics sent to us.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The official notice sent us by the publisher of the Pall Mall Magazine last week, to the effect that the March number would 'contain Mrs. Gallup's Reply to her Critics on the Bacon-Shakespeare controversy,' turns out to be incorrect. There is a portrait of Mrs. Gallup, and a description by her of her book, but no reply to anyone; that, an editorial note tells us, is still in the womb of the future—where, as far as any effective answer is concerned, it will ever remain.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. have recently published a popular edition of the late Dr. Newman Hall's Autobiography which was first issued about three years since. The Autobiography, it may be remembered, was begun by Dr. Hall on the eighty-first anniversary of his birthday.

In their sumptuous edition of the Plays of Shakespeare, Messrs. Methuen are publishing an edition of 'Julius Cæsar,' prepared by Mr. M. Macmillan. This edition is uniform in every way with Professor Dowden's 'Hamlet' and Mr. Craig's 'King Lear.'

The Art Journal for March will contain an article by Mr. Frank Rinder on Mr. Reginald Vaile's 'Collection of Eighteenth Century French Pictures' exhibited at Sheffield, and the frontispiece will be a reproduction of a portrait subject by Nattier.

Benjamin Swift's new novel 'Sordon,' which Messrs. Methuen are about to publish, 'is a book with a somewhat extraordinary motive, and deals with the problem whether it is pardonable to commit the "merciful crime" of delivering from the burden of existence the man suffering from an incurable disease.'

Much interest is being shown in parliamentary and political circles in the new serial publication 'Parliament, Past and Present,' by Messrs. Arnold Wright and Philip Smith, which Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. are publishing, and of which Part 2 will be ready in about a week. Numerous letters referring in very flattering terms to the venture in its literary and artistic aspects have been received from the leading statesmen and public men of to-day. Mr. Balfour, in a highly complimentary communication, has announced his intention to become a subscriber. Lord Peel, the ex-Speaker and the greatest living authority on parliamentary procedure, also intimates that he will take in the parts, and says that 'if they attain the interest and display the same execution as the opening number, the book will, I think, be popular.' Lord Rosebery, through his secretary, too, has written approvingly of the publication, specially commending its admirable illustrations. It may be added that in consideration of the national character of the work Sir Benjamin Stone has kindly consented to permit the reproduction in subsequent numbers of a small selection from his fine collection of photographs of the Palace of Westminster. The views will include several of a unique character which have never been reproduced in any form.

Messrs. Cassell & Company will shortly publish Mr. John Foster Fraser's new book entitled 'The Real Siberia.' Mr. Fraser spent the end of last summer, the autumn, and the beginning of the winter in traversing Siberia from end to end. He journeyed from Moscow to Vladivostok and made a dash across Manchuria, which at the time was closed by the Russians to foreigners.

Mr. Charles Dixon, the well-known authority on birds and bird life, has in the press a new book entitled 'Birds' Nests: an Introduction to the Science of Oology.' The author points out that although much has been written on birds, no work has been published entirely devoted to nests. The book, which Mr. Grant Richards will publish, deals scientifically with the development and structure of the various types of nests, and gives hints on collecting and pressing them.

We hear that that beautifully illustrated and bound set of books, the Anglo-Saxon Review, 10 vols., has ceased to exist, and believe the remaining stock has been bought by Mr. John Grant, of Edinburgh, who has a few complete sets for sale.

Messrs. Harrison & Sons will publish 'The Coronation Guide to London,' illustrated, with maps. The work will be prepared by an expert.

In its report of the Annual Dinner of the American Booksellers' League, the Publishers' Weekly rather unkindly adds, after giving a long report of one speaker, that Mr. Lloyd then enlivened the company with a couple of comic songs.

That the speaker was not Mr. J. Kendrick Bangs will be clear from the following little story which he told in responding to the toast of 'Over the Plum Pudding.' He confessed, with some embarrassment, that this toast was a clever 'ad.' which his press agent had worked into the programme; nevertheless he was unable to speak on the subject, not having read the book. He preferred to speak upon 'Book-sellers I have Met' or 'Wild Publishers I have Hunted,' and finally chose the first of these topics. He mentioned the first meeting with Volney Streamer at Brentano's.

Stopping one summer day for some light reading en route to his vacation haunts, he was offered by Mr. Streamer, unaware of his identity, one of his own books. 'Oh, I don't want that,' said J. K. B. 'I can't read Bangs.' 'Well, do you know,' confided the other, 'neither can I.' When Mr. Bangs gave the name and address to which the books were to be sent, Mr. Streamer uttered one of those exclamations usually printed in dashes, and nearly fainted.

An edition of the 'Antigone of Sophocles' has been added to Messrs. Macmillan's 'Classical' series. The editor is Mr. M. A. Bayfield, late headmaster of Eastbourne College, who has already prepared for the same series the 'Electra of Sophocles' and the 'Ion of Euripides.'

The late Archbishop Benson delivered during several years courses of lectures to ladies in Lambeth Chapel, with a general bearing on social life and responsibilities. These lectures were given from very brief notes, but many of the audience took down summaries, and during part of the time a shorthand writer attended, engaged by the Duchess of Bedford, who writes an introduction to the volume compiled from these various materials by Miss Margaret Benson. The work will shortly be published by Messrs. Macmillan with the title of 'Addresses on the Acts of the Apostles.'

Mr. G. C. Bompas, who gives us a volume on the Shakespeare-Bacon controversy, is a brother of the well-known K.C. He is a leading member of the Baconian Society, and his book, which Messrs. Sampson Low will publish, is on the lines of study pursued by that body. In large part it is a comparison of the writings of Shakespeare and Bacon, with the view of showing their similarity. The Baconian theory is so much to the front just now that the author of it may be recalled. She was a beautiful American lady, Miss Delia Bacon, who visited this country some fifty years ago. Besides her theory, she brought with her introductions from Emerson, Hawthorne, and other eminent Americans.—Daily Chronicle.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. will immediately add 'Barry Lyndon' to the new Thackeray they are issuing. It will be in one volume, and of Mr. C. E. Brock's illustrations the frontispiece will be in photogravure. The characteristics of this new edition, by the way, are that it will be issued complete, one novel appearing monthly, and that it is being set from a large type, which is somewhat of a departure in an edition of Thackeray—not to mention Mr. Brock's illustrations, the most important feature of all.

In a work on the Spanish-American War there was some question as to the propriety of the kissing of returned heroes so generally indulged in by the American girls. But the kiss as a reward for valour has the sanction of the ages. Ladies of all ages have pointed with pride to the example of dauntless Joan, Countess of Montfort, who heroically defended Hennebont against Charles of Blois until the arrival of the English. Froissart tells us that when the brave old Sir Walter Manny, after the defeat of the besiegers, entered the town, the noble Countess descended from the castle to welcome her deliverers, 'she kissed Sir Walter and all his companions, one after the other, two or three times, and one might well say that she was a valiant and splendid lady.' Surely a fine subject for an historical painting.

Messrs. Methuen are publishing in their 'Little Library' an edition of the novels of Susan Ferrier. The features of this edition are the only perfect text now in print, a life and study of Miss Ferrier by the Earl of Iddesleigh, and introductions and bibliographies by Miss Goodrich Freer. The first novel is 'Marriage,' in two volumes.

The alterations made in the 'Statesman's Year-Book' for 1902 comprise not only the bringing up to date of the great mass of statistical information it contains, but also statements respecting recent important events. The preliminary matter includes seven new maps, showing the population in 1902 of the World, of Europe, and of the British Isles; the growth of the population of countries and the growth of the population of towns; the new North-West Frontier Province of India; and the Nicaragua Canal and its effect upon the commerce of the world. Various new diagrams are also introduced.

The edition of Lamb's 'Essays of Elia' which Mr. C. E. Brock illustrated for Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. three years ago is about to pass into a fourth edition.

'Out of the Cypress Swamp,' by Miss Edith Rickert, is a new novel which Messrs. Methuen publish. The scene is Louisiana in the early 19th century. Among the characters are the famous Baratarians—men driven by unjust laws to piracy. The plot deals with the struggle of a man to bend to his own will an inflexible system.

The late Eugene Field had a quiet way of sizing-up a man. Describing a deadhead politician, he said: 'Senator Dawes has been out among the Sioux Indians too. They call him Ne-Ha-Wo-Ne-To—which, according to our office dictionary, is the Indian for Go-To-Sleep-Standing-Up.'—Julian Ralph in the New York Bookbuyer.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. will publish about Easter a new volume of poems by the Poet Laureate.

Mr. A. C. Haddon, Sc.D., F.R.S., the leader of the Cambridge Anthropological Expedition to New Guinea and Sarawak, gives in his 'Headhunters: Black, White, and Brown,' the results of the experiences of his party in out-of-the-way places and among primitive peoples of various stages of culture. One object of the book is to present an accurate and sympathetic account of savage custom and belief. The effects of contact with the white man are duly noted. The book is copiously illustrated with original photographs and sketches. Messrs. Methuen are the publishers.

Two American scholars, Professors J. B. Greenough and G. L. Kittredge, have put together a series of discourses upon 'Words and their Ways in English Speech, which may be compared to the late Archbishop Trench's works on proverbs and on language.

For the subjects of 'The Passing of Seyld, and other Poems,' the author, Mr. E. E. Kellett, has gone to the sagas of Ireland. Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. announce the book for immediate publication.

Messrs. Methuen will publish in a few days Mr. C. J. Cutcliffe Hyne's new story of adventure which is entitled 'Mr. Horrocks, Purser.' It describes the history of that gentleman, together with many of the doings of Captain Kettle.

Messrs. Simmons & Waters, 11 Spencer Street, Leamington, send us their catalogue, No. 151, with some tempting items in the shape of mezzotints, aquatints, water-colours, &c., at what seem to be very reasonable prices. They guarantee that their stock is of genuine old work, no modern impressions being kept by them.

Messrs. Dent will shortly publish a new volume by Mr. Thomas Newbigging, entitled 'Love's Cradle, and other Papers.' The title-essay deals with the 'Age of the Troubadours and Chivalry.' The Mystery and Miracle Plays and the Gladiatorial Spirit are among the subjects of other papers.

Messrs. Methuen have just issued a new novel by Mrs. L. T. Meade, entitled 'Drift.' It is the life story of a man who forgets God and lives for selfish ambition.

THE LONDON BRANCH OF THE GENERAL GERMAN LANGUAGE ASSO- CIATION.

We are glad to learn that the London Branch of the General German Language Association is flourishing, and held its annual meeting and festival on February 8 at the Holborn Viaduct Hotel, when Herr A. Krüger Velthusen delivered an address on Goethe's 'Confession of a Beautiful Soul.' The aim of the Association is to purify and simplify the German language, to discard as much as possible the old-fashioned lengthy sentences, and to extend the knowledge of German literature. The good work of such an association does not necessarily end with its valuable influence on secondary education; for an increased knowledge of German language and literature implies a better understanding of the German nation.

THE LAST WORDS OF JULIUS CÆSAR.

The Morning Post says:—Some whose business is concerned with books must have thought of the alleged last words of Julius Cæsar when they read an article in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR on publishers' preliminary paragraphs. But it is only with the paragraph that is also a puff that the article in question is concerned, and not with those plain and useful descriptions of forthcoming works which are of interest to every booklover. As the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR points out, editors are frequently asked 'kindly to announce' that authors, of whom they know nothing, have written volumes—still unpublished—which are possessed of every imaginable merit. We have frequently referred to this absurdity ourselves. If a newspaper does 'kindly announce' such things, without at the same time 'announcing' that the statement is not its own but the publisher's, what is the position of the paper when, on receipt of the book itself, it turns out to be quite unworthy of the laudatory adjectives in the paragraph?

ORIGIN OF

MESSRS. HARPER & BROTHERS.

The original firm of the Harpers was founded in 1817 by James and John Harper, and was established on Dover Street, in old New York. Their selection of the books to be published first by the young firm speaks well for the serious character of the public taste to which they wished to cater. Their first publication was 'Seneca's Morals'; the second, Mavor's 'Latin Syntax'; the third, 'Locke on the Human Understanding.' It is interesting to glance over the early newspaper advertisements of the firm, which are in marked contrast to the 'display ads.' in fashion at the present time. They were mere formal citations of the titles and prices of the volumes offered for sale, with perhaps a sentence or so descriptive, but not laudatory, of the nature of their contents. In 1823 they were burnt out, but, so far from being discouraged by this catastrophe, they purchased the Cliff and Pearl Street property now occupied by the present house, and long since famous as 'Franklin Square.'—American Stationer.

BOOKSELLERS' SEASIDE HOLIDAY HOME,

49 ROYAL PARADE, EASTBOURNE.

(From the Annual Report of the House Committee)

The Committee have pleasure in presenting details of the Receipts and Expenditure for the Seaside Holiday Home during the year 1901. The receipts from visitors to the Home are not equal to those of the previous year, mainly in consequence of a falling off of the numbers in the winter and spring; it is, however, gratifying to note that the expenditure in several items has decreased. The Committee would venture again to remind the heads of bookselling and publishing firms that the Home has been much appreciated by those visiting it for rest in the early spring and autumn. No less than 1,600 adults and children have visited the Home since it was opened, and this fact alone constitutes a claim on the trade generally. There is an excellent library in the Home, most of the leading illustrated periodicals being always accessible to visitors.

The Committee have again to thank the proprietors of the Athenæum, Bookseller, PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, City Press, and Newsagent and Booksellers' Review for their continued interest in the Institution. They also desire to express their thanks to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd., for an additional present of books.

All applications for Rooms, Tariff of Charges, and any further information should be made direct to the Secretary, Mr. George Larnier, 23 Paternoster Row, E.C.

February, 1902.

BOOKS MAY BE IMPORTED INTO THE UNITED STATES THROUGH THE MAILS.

We are indebted to the Bookseller for eliciting some definite information which will be very useful to publishers outside the United States, and we are indebted to the New York Publishers' Weekly for obtaining the information wanted. It says:—

'A note published in the London Bookseller for January 17 has caused considerable uneasiness among English publishing houses, who are hesitating to transact business by mail until their postal rights are understood. The note referred to is as follows:—

'IS THE U.S.A. IN THE POSTAL UNION?—Up till recently it has been possible to post books to any part of the United States, provided they were within the limits of size and weight prescribed by the Union. We have, however, recently received a communication from a publishing firm in London complaining that the first volume of a new work sent to the editor of an American journal for review was taxed 25 per cent. of its value, and an intimation given him that if the second volume arrived 100 per cent. ad valorem duty would be charged as a fine, because it would constitute a second offence. The copies referred to were marked "Review Copy" on the outside. As the Postmaster-General appears to be at present helpless in the matter, we commend this to the notice of those publishers who may be intending to send review copies to the other side.

'While there seems to be no account of, or explanation for this special case, we assure the several correspondents who have made inquiry of us that it is quite within the letter and spirit of the law to send books, whether dutiable or not, through the mails. Indeed, no other merchandise than books may be imported through the mails. A duty of twenty-five per cent. is collected on all books imported except on books printed exclusively in foreign languages, books in the English language printed more than twenty years ago, and books imported for Government use, for the Library of Congress, for educational, scientific, religious, philosophical or literary institutions and societies. All other new books, including review copies, must pay duty when the book is delivered. The sender, for obvious reasons, cannot prepay the duty.

'As to the particular complaint made by the Bookseller, Byron W. Winters, acting deputy collector of the New York Postal Customs Bureau, said to a representative of the New York Post: "It is a great mistake either on the publishers' part or on the part of some clerk here. It is an offence to send any dutiable article of merchandise into the States through the mail except books. Books are alone excepted. It may be that the publisher sent periodicals, music, etchings, or some other matter, and he was informed that this was an offence, and if repeated the value of the publication, together with the duty, would be collected, and he may have jumped to the conclusion that this applied to books. Of course, some clerk here may have been under the same misapprehension of the law, and so have made the reported blunder, but I do not think so."'

STAY IN THE STORE.

The constant presence in the store of the proprietor during business hours is a very important factor in many a success. Of course he must take a vacation, or several of them in the course of the year, the caption of this article to the apparent contrary notwithstanding.

He should be there, not to wait on each customer (for that would be a physical impossibility after the store has outgrown its babyhood), but for the moral effect which his presence has upon the discipline of the establishment; for the example upon the clerks, so as to insure their constant attendance; for the comfort which many a customer takes in the presence of the authoritative head, and for the satisfaction of many in referring to that authority on any question of doubt and uncertainty.

Many a merchant is in the habit of running out at any time for this or that trivial purpose—to get a 'soda' at the druggist's, or a cigar round the corner, or to 'see a man.' In consequence these absences may reach a total of several hours a day. The effect is demoralising. The head clerk goes to the barber shop when he feels like it; the watchmaker reads the paper; the boy loiters on his return from the post office to consult another boy on the programme for the evening; things are at sixes and sevens, because the example of the proprietor is followed by the subordinates.

But the important reason for his continual presence is to be on hand against the visit of the customer who wants to see the proprietor personally; and there are many such whose wants may be trivial, but these wants must be attended to by the 'boss' in person or the customer is not satisfied. Then there is a certain guarantee of good faith in the presence of the proprietor—a sort of moral endorsement of the quality of goods sold by the clerk at the other end of the store; a sort of assurance that the price is right, when the price is made in visible presence of the owner. Women especially are exasperated when they cannot refer to the final authority on a question of quality, or taste, or fitness; and many a customer has been permanently lost to a business by the casual absence of the proprietor who is 'out.'

Stay in the store during business hours and you may smoke a better cigar at the end of the year!—The Keystone.

Letters to the Editor

UNIFORMITY OF SPELLING AND PRINTING.

SIR,—Every printer and publisher who notices your article and Mr. Collins's letter—(the s after the apostrophe, certainly)—will, like myself, be very much interested.

Mr. Collins proposes to undertake an Herculean task in determining once and for ever correct spelling and the use of italics. Spelling must surely depend much upon usage, and the use of italics on the extension of anglicity.

I am content to take Webster's International Dictionary as my guide. By what rule does Mr. Collins decide that some adapted words should be printed in italics and others in ordinary (Roman) character? Webster gives all the words Mr. Collins would decide should be printed in italics—viz.: anglice, ap'ropos, a'priori, a'mour propre; and he has the contraction of antemeridian (spelt with an a not e) in small caps, A.M.; aid'-de'-camp without the e.

The ideal author, George Meredith, always spells judgement with the e. The Anglo-Saxon word (as by Chaucer) is judgement. Perhaps in the course of years we shall again so spell it. Sir W. Hamilton gave its meaning as 'the mental act by which one thing is affirmed or denied by another.' The word would be a good short title for the subject.

Yours faithfully,

W. HENRY ROBINSON.

THE ENGLISH CATALOGUE.

SIR,—May we venture to point out that we think it might be of considerable service to the trade generally if the English addresses of the American Publishers were inserted in any subsequent issue of the English Catalogue?

CIPHERS AND BACON v. SHAKESPEARE.

SIR,—There is one argument that has been omitted in all the correspondence and articles I have seen, viz.: the impossibility of a secret cipher of the kind indicated being in a book printed after the inventor's death. Simply because one error of misplacement (undetectable to any but the inventor) would be sufficient to throw the remainder of the cipher out of gear; and printing in those early days was carelessly done.

[It is only fair to say that many Baconians do not believe in the cipher business, but there might be an error in a cipher and yet the context might give the meaning of the missing word or sentence.—Ed. P.C.]

REVIEWS v. ADVERTISEMENTS.

SIR,—I am sorry to differ from you in your editorial comment on the letter from 'A London Publisher,' in your issue of the 15th, but my experience of twenty-eight years in a publishing house is certainly directly contrary to your own.

It has been repeatedly said to my firm that 'if you do not advertise you can hardly expect your books to be reviewed,' and letters are constantly coming drawing attention to the reviews, and asking for advertisements in consequence, and I am speaking of high-class papers.

A publisher of one of our leading weekly papers said to me that if advertisements were not given by publishers he should certainly not trouble to place books sent for review before the editor, on the ground that 'if a publisher helps me in the way of advertising, of course I help him.' I also know for a fact that in many cases if my firm did not advertise, not a single book that was sent for review ever got noticed.

A LONDON ASSISTANT.

THE STAMBOUL CAFÉ, 71 FLEET STREET, E.C.

DEAR SIR,—I beg to take the liberty of sending you a card referring to the above café. I shall be glad if you can cause it to be placed on the notice board in your reporter's office. I think that your staff would be pleased to know of a quiet retreat in Fleet Street where refreshments of the best quality may be had at moderate prices. Thanking you in anticipation,

I am, yours obediently,

BARON VERULAM.

'I hold every man a debtor to his profession, from the which, as men do of course seek to receive countenance and profit, so ought they of duty to endeavour themselves by way of amends to be a help and an ornament thereunto.'

Our American contemporary, The Publishers' Weekly, has been attributing this remark every week for years past to 'Lord Bacon'; we hope by this time the editor will have seen from his PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR that this is a 'vulgar error'—and alter it to Sir Francis Bacon.

TARIFF RULING ON BOOKS.

The proper marking of certain books imported by the Bowen-Merrill Company, of Indianapolis, Ind., has lately been engaging the attention of the Treasury Department. On November 23, 1899, the department advised the surveyor of customs at Indianapolis that books bearing an imprint on the title-page exhibiting the name of a domestic place and firm, while the last page exhibited in small type the name and place of business of the foreign printers, were not admissible to entry, as being a technical violation of the provisions of Section II. of the present tariff Act. Since then the matter has been further investigated by the department, and it having been ascertained that it has been the custom from time immemorial for book printers to place their firm name and address on the last page, as aforesaid, that publishers are unwilling to vary from a time-honoured practice, and that the stamping of printers' names on the title-page would be a disfigurement, it has been held by the department that books marked according to said custom are entitled to entry. Collectors and other officers of the customs have been instructed to be governed accordingly.—A. F. T., in The American Stationer.

FIRST ENGLISH EDITION OF THE 'MEMOIRS OF CHATEAUBRIAND.'

'At a recent literary gathering in a French country house Madame Alphonse Daudet took a plébiscite on the question, "If you were only allowed 20 books to read, whose books would you choose?" The Evangelists headed the list, followed in order by Chateaubriand, Victor Hugo, La Fontaine, Pascal, Alphonse Daudet, Balzac, &c.'

Messrs. Freemantle & Co., who send us this bit of gossip, also send us a prospectus of their limited edition 6 vol. translation by Alexander T. de Mattos of the famous 'Memoirs,' from which we take the following interesting extracts: 'The style is inimitable, and the thoughts are no less noble than the language in which they are clothed. Take a passage from Chateaubriand's Preface to the Memoirs:

"Ce lieu me plaît: il a remplacé pour moi les champs paternels; je l'ai payé du produit de mes rêves et de mes veilles. . . ."

"Je suis attaché à mes arbres; je leur ai adressé des élégies, des sonnets, des odes. Il n'y a pas un seul d'entre eux que je n'aie soigné de mes propres mains, que je n'aie dévoré du ver attaché à sa racine, de la chenille collée à sa feuille; je les connais tous par leurs noms, comme mes enfants: c'est ma famille, je n'en ai pas d'autre, j'espère mourir auprès d'elle."

'I have met,' he says, 'nearly all the men who in my time have played a part, great or small, in my own country or abroad: from Washington to Napoleon, from Louis XVIII. to Alexander, from Pius VII. to Gregory XVI., from Fox, Burke, Pitt, Sheridan, Londonderry, Capo d'Istria to Mallesherbes, Mirabeau, and the rest; from Nelson, Bolivar, Mehemet Pacha of Egypt to Suffren, Bougainville, La Pérouse, Moreau, and so forth. I have been one of an unprecedented triumvirate: three poets of different interests and nationality, who filled, within the same decade, the post of Minister of Foreign Affairs—myself in France, Mr. Canning in England, Señor Martinez de la Rosa in Spain. I have lived successively through the empty years of my youth and the years filled with the Republican Era, the annals of Bonaparte and the reign of Legitimacy.

'I have explored the seas of the Old World and the New, and trod the soil of the four quarters of the globe.'

To quote again from the preface:

'The sad necessity which has always held me by the throat has obliged me to sell my Memoirs. None can know what I have suffered by being compelled thus to hypothecate my tomb; but I owe this last sacrifice to my vows and to the consistency of my conduct. With an almost pusillanimous attachment I looked upon these Memoirs as confidants, from which I would not care to part. . . .

'Ah! if, before quitting the earth, I could have found some one rich enough, confiding enough, to buy up the shares of the syndicate, and one who would not, like the syndicate, be under the necessity of sending the work to press as soon as my knell had sounded!

Chateaubriand died on July 4, 1848.

Cemeteries are choked with the graves of men that brought themselves to premature death through worry. And the abodes of the living are densely habited by half wrecks and whole failures that came to this melancholy condition through the same agonising process. Human records will never show the number and class of the millions that came into the world with goodly prospects and fair opportunities, but that went down to defeat under the weight of woes that were never realised, or through the slaying suspense which was more potent to blast and intimidate than would have been the actual happening of the danger feared. There is very little doubt among medical men and even unskilled laymen that the emotion commonly designated as worry has a power as devastating and much more persistent than those of grief, disease, or overwork.—Geyer's Stationer.

ANCIENT GREEK AND LATIN TEXTS IN PHOTOGRAPHY.

Mr. A. W. Sijthoff, of Leyden, announces for early publication in his important series of phototype reproductions, entitled 'Codices Græci et Latini photographici depicti,' two new volumes, 'Tacitus, Codex Laurentianus Mediceus, 68 I. and 68 II.,' issued separately or in one volume. The value of these famous Medicean MSS. as the recognised authority for the Annals and History of Tacitus will be enhanced by a Latin introduction from the pen of Prof. Enrico Rostagno, the distinguished curator of the Laurentian Library, who has already finished 68 I. As Tacitus is the seventh of the twelve parts forming the entire series, and as the publisher states that the negatives for the eighth part, 'Terentius, Codex Ambrosianus, II. 75 inf.,' are already in his hands, there is every prospect of the series of twelve being completed in due course.

So valuable is this publication to critical students of ancient texts, and so expensive the cost of its production, that its enterprising publisher certainly merits the encouragement and support of public libraries, learned societies, and palæographical students in his arduous undertaking. In size and style the volumes of Tacitus will resemble their predecessors. The page of Cod. Med. 68 I. measures 41×72 cm., and that of Cod. Med. 68 II. 49×82 cm. Nothing can be finer than the specimen of this great work before us. The reproduction of the original, and the paper on which it is printed, are absolutely faultless.

WATERMARKING HAND-MADE PAPER.

An invention has been patented in England by Ant. and G. B. Fornari, paper-makers, of Fabriano, Italy, which relates to the manufacture of hand-made paper with filigrees or watermarks, and has for its object a new method of forming the filigrees or watermarks in the same colour or in a different colour from that of the paper in such a manner that they are only visible when looking through the paper, this kind of filigreed paper being specially suitable for making bank notes, bills, and the like. The invention consists in making each sheet of two layers of paper and in inserting between them a third layer of white or coloured paper of any desired design, such third sheet constituting the filigree or watermark, which can only be seen by transference or when the paper is held against the light.

In the first place there is produced, according to the usual method of making hand-made paper, one layer of paper which is arranged over a sheet of felt, and the patentees then proceed to make the filigree or watermark as follows: A base is provided with a network as is commonly practised in the manufacture of paper. Over this frame is placed a frame, in the compact surface of which is cut out the design which is to constitute the filigree or watermark, the network being in close contact with plate, and being only exposed at the point where the plate has been cut out so as to show the design which it is desired to produce in filigree. The frames are fastened to the board or base by means of screws or otherwise. The whole is then placed in a tank of white or coloured paste or pulp, and as the pulp only deposits upon the uncovered network, the water sliding over it, a sheet of paper is thus produced cut out in the required design. Such design is then removed from the matrix and arranged over the sheet of paper previously deposited upon the felt, and another sheet like the first is then placed over it, the three layers forming one sheet of paper.

It will thus be understood that in this way it is easy to produce paper with any design in filigree or watermark, which is only visible by looking through the sheet against a light.

JULES SIMON'S SACRIFICES TO BOOK-BUYING.

The other day the library of the philosopher and statesman, Jules Simon, was sold by auction in Paris. It consisted of 1,127 items, which had taken fifty years to collect. In the preface to the sale catalogue, M. Gustave Masson tells how his father, little by little, accumulated his library, which began with the purchase of the Tauchnitz collection of the classics. 'His pleasure was buying books, the cost of which he deducted from his necessary expenses. And, thanks to his erudition, to his keen scent, to his peregrinations, to his laborious researches, to fortuitous or happy circumstances, to a sort of vocation as a persistent book-hunter, he enriched his library with some treasure by impoverishing himself. When he had given way to what he called a fancy, he reduced his household expenses for the next month so as to repair the breach made in his finances by the new tenant of his shelves. Sometimes he reproached himself; but his scruples were appeased when he had satisfied himself that the volume was worth and would be worth more than it had cost; and that, after having been an expense, it would become a solace in days of trial. . . . He so loved those books of his that he felt the pressing need of attaching himself to them by doing what most lovers of books condemn—that is, writing notes in them with his own hand. "Otherwise," he said, "knowledge which has cost me so much will leave no trace save these yellow leaves which I shall never read again."

What a lesson did that philosopher and beneficent man teach to students by such self-denial! Let us hope he may find imitators even in these days of newspaper and novel reading.

OBITUARY.

We regret to have to record the death at Mafeking on Saturday, February 1, from peritonitis, of Philip J. Mushet, Sergeant in Paget's Horse.

Mr. Mushet, who was the younger son of the late Mr. Robert Mushet, Deputy Master of the Mint, was educated mainly abroad, and he was for some years associated with the firm of Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.

In 1882 he joined the establishment of Messrs. Ballantyne, Hanson & Co. at Edinburgh, where he acquired a practical knowledge of printing. Three years later, in 1885, he joined the London staff of Messrs. Ballantyne, Hanson & Co., where he remained—except for an interval of about a year, during which he travelled to Tasmania and Ceylon—taking an active part in the business and ultimately becoming a junior partner.

Early last year he enlisted in the Yeomanry and left for the seat of war in South Africa, where his letters depicted him in the best of health and spirits. Mr. Mushet's thoughtful kindness and unvarying courtesy endeared him to all with whom he was associated, and his death is deeply felt and will be long regretted.

THE PROPOSED SHAKESPEARE AND DANTE STATUES IN ROME.

Our Rome correspondent writes as follows: 'The Italians are a sentimental people, but sometimes their sentiment takes a graceful form. They felt wounded by the proposed suppression of the Italian language at Malta eighteen years hence, and they were correspondingly delighted when Mr. Chamberlain removed the prospect. Now their pleasure at Great Britain's friendly concession is expressing itself in a proposal that a statue of Shakespeare shall be erected in Rome, possibly on the Palatine Hill, where the figure of the poet will overlook the scene of "Julius Cæsar." The proposition has come about in a curious way. The German Emperor presented the statue of Goethe to the City of Rome, and during the discussion as to its site which took place in the Municipal Council a Clerical senator proposed that, as an antithesis to the "pagan" figure of Goethe, there ought to be erected a statue of the divine Roman Catholic poet Dante. The Italians, who consider the Ghibelline Dante to be anything but a Roman Catholic poet, will agree to the erection of his statue in Rome provided that on the pedestal there be carved Dante's famous lines of the XVIth Canto of the "Purgatorio":

Di', oggimai, che la Chiesa di Roma,
Per confondere in sè duo reggimenti,
Cade nel fango, e s'è brutta e la soma, which form one of the most terse denunciations of the Temporal Power ever written. But, during the discussion of the idea of a statue to Dante as a complement or a counterpoise to that of Goethe, the idea was put forward that Goethe and Dante would not be complete without Shakespeare, and that the erection of a statue of Shakespeare in Rome at the same time as that of Dante would be a delicate proof of gratitude to the British people for having allowed the language of Dante to retain its official position in a British colony. A committee is being constituted under the presidency of Prince Prospero Colonna, Mayor of Rome, to collect public subscriptions for the purpose. It is to be hoped that the genial idea will receive sufficient support to enable it to be carried out.'—Morning Post.

A MORAL TOY.

A very singular toy, called 'The Drunkard's Progress,' attempts to combine morality with amusement. It is a long box or stage, with a cardboard house at each end. A groove runs from one house to the other, and in this groove stands a little cardboard figure of the drunkard. The double doors of each inn stand wide open, but to whichever of them the toper directs himself it shuts in his face. On the walls of the houses are printed some cheerful bits of information—to the effect that 71 per cent. of the persons who die of consumption are alcoholics, and that 'the slightest wounds or injuries' prove fatal to a tippler.'—Geyer's Stationer.

Notices of Books

From Mr. H. R. Allenson.—'The Relationships of Life,' by C. Silvester Horne, M.A. These eight addresses on the common relationships of life, considered from a Christian point of view, were delivered at monthly intervals to congregations of young men and women at whose request they have been printed. We admire the good feeling and good sense which dictated this request, and thus enabled us in some degree to participate in the profit and pleasure those young people must have derived from them. The subjects are the relations of: Parents and Children; Brothers and Sisters; Lovers; Husbands and Wives; Masters and Servants; Ladies and Gentlemen; Friends and Acquaintances; Preachers and Hearers. They are all calculated to make the hearer or reader wiser and better; for they are the words of a preacher intellectually well equipped for his office, and speaking the truth without fear or favour, but in all charity. Did space permit we should be able to justify this opinion by quotations.

From Messrs. Blackie & Son, Limited.—'Hammond's Hard Lines,' by Skelton Kuppord. New edition. Tom Hammond is a rather unattractive, big, dull, lazy schoolboy of twelve; indeed, the author goes the length of saying he was a distinctly bad boy. Dr. Ackwork, the headmaster of Willowbank School, asserted that he was the worst boy in it; but the doctor disliked thrashing his pupils, and having noticed, during a holiday trip in Germany, the cells used there for imprisoning troublesome boys, has a similar one built with the word 'Carcer' painted over the door. One day Tom becomes the first inmate of this den, in which he is to stay from one till six, and transcribe ten pages of Vergil. After writing out two pages Tom uses the remaining contents of the inkstand in tracing caricatures of the masters on the whitewashed wall. 'Then he thrust his hands into his trousers pockets, stretched out his legs as far as they would go, and sat scowling at the table.' Suddenly a little fairy appears and grants the discontented boy three wishes, with the result of causing more plague than profit to Tom and all connected with him. The story is full of adventures.

From Mr. T. B. Bumpus, 4 St. Michael's Alley, Cornhill.—'Summer Holidays among the Glories of France: Her Cathedrals and Churches,' by T. Francis Bumpus. We can scarcely compliment the author on the suitability of the title he has chosen for his volume, seeing that summer holidays raise expectations of something beyond the mere exploration of ecclesiastical buildings, though possibly of a much more trivial nature, but we have every appreciation of the interest of his work. If anything, the book is a little too earnest in its treatment—a lighter style would occasionally have been a relief—and the writer apparently forgets that he has more than one type of reader to consider. Perhaps something of this sombreness, if we may so term it, is due to the smallness of the type and the evident desire shown to compress as much as possible into small space. The volume, however, gives an excellent description of the various churches and cathedrals in France, and an especial feature is the admirable illustrations, which have been splendidly worked up by the printers.

From Mr. Thomas Burleigh, 376 Strand, W.C.—'School and Sea Days: Illustrated from my Sketch Log,' by Alan Oscar (W. B. Whall). The author in an 'Apology' points out that this narrative was written for his children, but it scarcely seems quite adapted for youngsters, the style at times being a little heavy and old-mannered, though its incidents are lively enough. However, it is certainly not without interest in its portrayal of sea life half a century ago, and the illustrations, if not technically faultless, have the good quality of reproducing the humour and excitement of a situation very vividly. Some few mistakes occur in the printing of the book. The tune Uncle Toby, for instance, in 'Tristram Shandy,' was so fond of humming was 'Lillebullero,' not 'Lillibullero' as Mr. Whall has it.

From Messrs. James Clarke & Co.—'The Sceptre without a Sword,' by George Matheson, M.A., D.D. A Christmas study on the striking passage, Daniel vii. 13, 14. Dr. Matheson imagines the Prophet keeping watch in the fields of time, if not with the shepherds in the fields of Bethany, waiting for the beatific vision of the angelic host proclaiming the good tidings of the Nativity. Yet he, too, saw in his vision, after the apparition of the four beasts, a fifth figure, that of the Son of Man who was to have everlasting dominion. The Doctor argues that the four beasts prefigured the old world dominations of conquest, despotism, crafty diplomacy, and democracy, while the fifth figure's rule of life was self-sacrifice, a rule never more distinctly manifested than at Christmas time. This volume, which is beautifully printed by Messrs. W. Speaight & Sons and handsomely bound, is admirably suited for a Christmas or New Year's gift.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'The Way of Perfection,' by Saint Theresa, edited by A. R. Waller. This beautifully printed and judiciously edited issue of the 'Way of Perfection' forms a volume of Messrs. Dent's valuable series 'The Cloister Library.' The editor has supplemented it with brief yet informing Notes, a list of dates of the most important events connected with the saint and her literary and conventual work, a reprint of Richard Crashaw's poem, 'The Flaming Heart,' written upon the Book and Picture of the Seraphical Saint Teresa, various appreciations of her, and other matter of interest relating to her life and writings. A most appropriate book for presentation at this season of the Church's year.

From the same.—'Beautiful Birds,' by Edmund Selous. Children owe a debt of gratitude both to Mr. Selous and Mr. Hubert D. Astley (who has illustrated the volume) for a book that is at once charmingly written and instructive. The author has evinced a certain amount of skill in attempting to induce his juvenile readers to persuade their mothers that the wearing of birds or their feathers as head-gear is likely to encourage cruelty, but we are afraid his remarks are likely to make his readers priggish; and, in the whole world, is there anything more detestable than a child prig?

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'Under the Sword,' by the Countess de Sulmalla. The most remarkable feature of this novel is its ending, which is so sudden and unexpected that the reader will be completely taken aback. For the better part of the story a young girl has a terrible secret hanging over her head, like the sword of Damocles—the said secret being that her father, whom she has always supposed to be dead, is still alive and is a murderer. This unpleasant fact is disclosed to her just before her mother's death, and from that time she has to face the demands of her disreputable parent for money, hitherto levied on the supposed widow. In the meantime the girl has fallen in love with, and is beloved by, an enthusiastic philanthropist, who carries on work in the East End of London. Everything promises well for their future happiness, when the impecunious father again interposes, and threatens his daughter with what he will do if more money is not forthcoming; the lover appearing on the scene beholds his sweetheart in the clutches of a dirty-looking tramp, and rushes to the rescue; he and the tramp are presently locked in a deadly embrace, the ground gives way beneath them, and they disappear over the side of a cliff, 'down, down, into the waters beneath—into eternity.' These are the last words of the book, and what becomes of the other characters we are not permitted to know.

From Messrs. Freemantle & Co.—'The Old Court Suburb: Memorials of Kensington—Regal, Critical, and Anecdotal,' by the late Leigh Hunt, Esq., edited by Austin Dobson, and newly embellished by Herbert Railton, Claude Shepperson, and Edmund J. Sullivan, 2 vols. Rarely have we come across a book more artistically produced than this charming edition of Leigh Hunt's work. Illustrations, printing, and paper are alike admirable, and the delicate binding in lilac and gold is quite a pleasure to the eye. Of the book itself it is scarcely necessary to write at length. It reveals the author both in his best and worst aspects, but the choice of subject is well suited to the display of that gay, vivacious, gentle-handed treatment which was one of Leigh Hunt's most notable characteristics. Arm-in-arm with this entertaining companion we pace the streets of Kensington, view its more noteworthy buildings, inquire into its early history, and are introduced to a large number of delightful characters, unhappily now dead. 'Nowhere,' as one of his early reviewers said, 'is it possible to become more agreeably acquainted with celebrated people or to wander more pleasantly in the bypaths of history.' Kensington of to-day naturally presents a very different appearance from what it did in 1855, when Leigh Hunt's work was first published by Messrs. Hurst & Blackett. New buildings have sprung up in all directions, and many of the old ones, such as Kensington House, Gore House, Colby House, and Scarsdale House, have disappeared. The notes given at the end of each volume are chiefly directed to such obscurities as may arise from this lapse of time, though of course no attempt is made to deal with the modern edifices of the neighbourhood; and Mr. Dobson is also responsible for a very interesting introduction. It is possible that Mr. Railton's architectural illustrations may be more pretty than exact, but, like those of Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Shepperson, they form an exceedingly pleasing accompaniment to the volumes.

From Messrs. Gale & Polden, Ltd.—'Organisation and Equipment made Easy (Subject "G" for the Promotion Examinations), with Appendix of all the Examination Papers up to date, fully answered, with references to the Official Books,' by Major S. T. Banning. We are not surprised to find that the success of this book has been so great as to warrant a second edition. From all points of view it is an exceedingly useful manual, likely to be of the greatest assistance in enabling candidates to pass the examination for promotion in subject 'G.' Opportunity has been taken of a new issue to thoroughly overhaul and revise the book, and it is now an admirable specimen of judicious arrangement and selection. The examination papers set since the publication of the first edition have been added, with their answers, to the Appendix, and the questions at the end of the various chapters have been supplemented by further extracts from R.M.C. papers.

From Messrs. Greening & Co., Limited.—'Our Lady of the Ice,' by Constance Sutcliffe. It becomes increasingly difficult for the reviewer of novels to differentiate between those books which are worthy of praise and those which are not worth reading. So many works of fiction are issued from the press which, forty or fifty years ago, would have made the reputation of their authors, but which, in these days of keen competition, hardly attract any notice at all. Miss Sutcliffe's book is distinctly worth reading, though it is not perhaps any better than scores which have passed through our hands during the last twelve months. She writes of the Alps, and two of her most prominent characters are Swiss guides. Max Imseng marries a girl, not because he loves her, but because she is cruelly ill-treated by her kinsman, and his chivalrous nature sees no other way of rescuing her from her life of misery and horror. To mar their peace comes a young Englishman, Jack Branscombe, who for many years has been accustomed to climb the mountains, with Max for his guide. Now Imseng's wife loves her husband with all the devotion and passion of a warm-blooded girl, and she becomes jealous of the Englishman who takes her husband away from the hearth to spend whole days and nights on the mountains. She is afraid that some day Max will meet with his death by a fall on the treacherous glaciers, and that Branscombe will return alone. From these simple elements of love, friendship, and jealousy, a dramatic story is evolved, which has freshness and originality. We presume the author is still young, and she will do still better work than this.

From Messrs. Abel Heywood & Son, Manchester.—'The Harmony of the Empire: being a Series of Sketches in Pictorial Geography of the British Possessions and Spheres of Influence,' by the author of 'The Making of Europe' and 'The Making of the British Colonies.' The object of this work is to arouse increased interest in the study of geography, and although the subject-matter is confined to those portions of the earth's surface actually or nominally under the control of Great Britain, it is hoped that the treatment will inspire the reader with a desire for more extended investigation. The volume is arranged in six sections, whereof the first is introductory and general. In this the author, after briefly explaining Mercator's Projection of the World, treats of sea-power, trade routes, steam as a motor-power, coals, coaling stations, &c. Then come the various extra-colonial dependencies of Great Britain, one group to each section, beginning with Ascension Island, and ending with Egypt. The last-named country is dealt with at exceptional length, as befitting the importance and interest of the subject. Marginal headings have been adopted throughout, and a good practice that has been followed is to transfer the dates to the margin, where they readily catch the eye and are impressed on the memory. The author has evidently taken great pains with his manual, and in its general arrangement and method of treatment the book should meet with cordial appreciation, both at the hands of school authorities and the general reader.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'Religion in Recent Art: Expository Lectures on Rossetti, Burne-Jones, Watts, Holman Hunt, and Wagner,' by P. T. Forsyth, D.D. It is not claimed for this volume that it possesses any particular value as an exposition of Art, pure and simple. The author in all sincerity admits that for students and experts in this field it has no worth. What he chiefly lays stress upon is the importance of Art in its religious influences—the power that it exercises over the imagination and its consequent strength in determining the cast of the disposition. According to his thinking, 'more than half of the religious difficulties that torment people in a day like this are due to the hard, inelastic, and unsympathetic order of mind which they bring to bear upon subjects the most subtle, genial, and flexible of all.' He selects four artists—Rossetti, Burne-Jones, Watts, and Holman Hunt—and with each he associates a particular phase of religion; with Rossetti the religion of natural passion, with Burne-Jones the religion of præternatural imagination, with Watts the religion of supernatural hope; and with Holman Hunt the religion of spiritual faith. A fifth lecture he devotes to Wagner as an apostle more particularly of pessimism. The volume is both thoughtful and interesting, and there is happily no assumption of superior knowledge in its pages. Dr. Forsyth writes frankly and unaffectedly, and evidently from a thorough conviction of the truth of what he urges. Included in his work are reproductions of several of the more notable paintings by the artists named.

From 'Home Words' Publishing Office.—'Hand and Heart Illustrated Tales,' Volume for 1901, edited by H. Somerses Bullock, M.A. The stories in this volume are not only thoroughly interesting, but full of wholesome teaching. Among the authors represented are the Rev. T. S. Millington, Mr. Edward Garrett, and the author of 'Deepdale Vicarage,' whose acquaintance we first made in the pages of the Quiver more years ago than we care to remember, and then firmly believed to be Mrs. Henry Wood. The attraction of this 'Hand and Heart' annual is much enhanced by a large number of illustrations.

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—'Ugly Pollo,' by Harold Hickman. Pollo is a dog who possesses the enviable habit of being able to talk and write down his thoughts. He is an honest dog, too; for he does not attempt to hide his faults, and on the very first page says there's no use in telling him he's ugly, for he knows that already. He is, however, an excellent companion, and what he has to say in this, his first book, is well worth reading. It is 'a simple tale told in simple language,' and would make an appropriate present for a child fond of animals, or for a child who has not yet learnt that dumb creatures possess many qualities which are not often found in human beings.

From the same.—'Chiefly Uncle Parker, and incidentally Aunt Parker,' by W. Carter Platts. The humour of this book is a little old-fashioned, and mostly of the kind that was first introduced into this country by Max Adeler and his American contemporaries; but no doubt there are many readers to whom it will appear fresh and original. That the author confidently expects such an unsophisticated audience may be gathered from the way in which he dishes up old material. The story of the two friends who made a wager of half-a-crown as to their ability to whistle 'The Bay of Biscay,' and neither of whom had the remotest idea of the tune—which was shown by the forfeiture of the one when his antagonist gave off 'God Save the King'—made us quite shudder by its antiquity; and there is an account of the performance of a Highland piper which in its main outlines is equally ancient. On the other hand the book has infinite liveliness and 'go,' and the author is evidently determined to lose nothing through want of emphasis—indeed, sometimes his burlesque exaggeration is a little overdone. The illustrations are not remarkable for any great merit, but are appropriate to the character of the book.

From Messrs. Lamley & Co.—'Domestic Experiences and Other Plays,' by I. E. M. Aitken. The first of these little plays which gives the title to the volume is perhaps the most ambitious, but it is also the least successful. The difficult part in a play is usually the latter half, and it is here where most writers fail. They commence merrily enough, giving much promise of future excellence, but hardly have they traversed two-thirds of their journey when the structure upon which they have been working shows signs of weakness, presently crumbles up, and the whole affair comes to grief. Something of this criticism applies to Mr. (?) Aitken's book, and more especially to 'Domestic Experiments.' The plays, however, are fairly suitable for amateur representation, and one of their chief merits is that they make little demand on scenery or stage accessories. Almost any large drawing-room would be suitable for the purpose.

From the Leadenhall Press, Ltd.—'The Songs of a Child, and other poems,' by 'Darling' (Lady Florence Douglas, now Lady Florence Dixie). Part I. These verses were written by the author between the age of ten and seventeen, and are now for the first time published, without alteration of any kind. They certainly bear evidence of remarkable poetic ability, most unusual in one of such tender years. There are frequent crudities, it is true, and occasionally the sentiment may seem a little false and unsubstantial, but when the youth of the composer is taken into consideration it is impossible to be sternly critical. The book contains an introductory poem, descriptive of his first meeting with Darling, by the first Lord Lytton, and a coloured portrait of the author when a child.

From Mr. John Long.—'The Mission of Margaret,' by Adeline Sergeant. Margaret's mission is to aid in the process of civilising the South Sea Islanders. Her husband is a worthy if somewhat commonplace clergyman who sacrifices his prospects in this country to carry the tidings of salvation to the dwellers in one of the South Pacific Islands, and she accompanies him. Subsequently he is killed in an attack by the inhabitants of a neighbouring island, and Margaret afterwards finds that her chief mission is to administer to the happiness of a previous lover at home. This story is the first of nine, the remainder being very ordinary Christmas tales, in which the sentiment has been laid on with a heavy hand, and forgiveness and good feeling are brought about without much reference to probability or inherent family attributes. Disobedient children, hard-hearted parents and grandparents, backsliding husbands, quarrelsome brothers, and the like are very much to the fore, but in each case the festive season has a most beneficial effect, and reformation and happiness result.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited.—'Compressed Air; its Production, Uses, and Applications,' by Gardner D. Hiscox, M.E. The great importance of compressed air in its relation to commerce has only been recognised within recent years, and even yet the literature of the science is particularly fragmentary and inadequate. It is with the object of supplying a sound, practical manual on the subject that Mr. Hiscox has written this volume. One of its chief aims is 'to make available the ascertained facts of experimental research in atmospheric phenomena, and, so far as possible, the fundamental basis upon which such ascertained facts securely rest.' The volume opens with a brief historical sketch of the subject, and thence proceeds to a consideration of the physical properties of air, its characteristics and force in motion, air pressures below atmospheric pressure, the power of the wind, isothermal compression and expansion of air, thermodynamics, adiabatic compression and expansion, the transmission of power by compressed air, the compressed-air motor air compressors, compressed air in mining and quarrying, pneumatic tools, air as applied to pyrometry, pneumatic work, refrigeration, the properties and uses of liquid air, the pneumatic system of tube transmission, and other branches of the inquiry. From this will be seen the thorough character of Mr. Hiscox's treatise, and how energetically he explores even the remotest recesses of his subject. The volume, in short, contains an able description of the physical properties of air from a vacuum to its liquid state, its thermodynamics, compression, transmission, and uses as a motive power. It is adequately illustrated.

From Messrs. Marshall Brothers.—'Pattie C. Ekins: her Life and Letters,' edited by her Sister, with a preface by Mr. J. Rendel Harris. This is the story of the quiet and unpretentious life of a delicate woman who suffered much from illnesses; but, coming from a good old religious yeoman stock, went bravely through life keeping a good heart and doing what she could. It is not a book full of adventure and incident; but there are some charming pictures of family and home life at the pleasant village of Warboys, where she was born in 1858, and resided, except for occasional visits to relatives and friends and seaside trips for her health's sake, until October 1889, when her family removed to Cambridge, where she died February 24, 1899. There is a bright, pleasant and hopeful spirit pervading 'Pattie Ekins' Life and Letters' which cannot fail to do good to those who read it. The volume is embellished by a portrait and a view of the church and manor-house at Warboys.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'A Bit of Shamrock,' by Mark Guy Pearse. It is a charming prose idyll which the gifted author presents to his readers in this pretty booklet. They will be ready to mingle their tears with those of little Kathleen Kilcoyn at having to part with poor Barney the donkey, 'who looked as if the soul of him was gone' when his darling young mistress whom he loved was not near him. We are not, however, about to spoil the reader's enjoyment of this charming interlude in an Irish trout-fishing expedition, which is as short and sweet as poor Barney's gallop, but shall content ourselves by commending it to the notice of all who can enjoy a pathetic yet heartening tale of the ways of simple Irish folk. Many a successful novel of to-day may vainly be searched from end to end without finding a scintilla of the brightness illumining every page of Mr. Mark Guy Pearse's 'Bit of Shamrock.'

From Messrs. Morgan & Scott.—'Last Letters and Further Records of Martyred Missionaries of the China Inland Mission,' with portraits and illustrations, edited by Marshall Broomhall, B.A. In the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, No. 1815, we called the attention of our readers to that painfully interesting record of Christian heroism entitled 'Martyred Missionaries of the China Inland Mission.' Since that book was published most of the scenes of martyrdom have been visited by missionaries of the various societies concerned, and all necessary facts investigated, memorial services held for those who had fallen, and a becoming interment arranged wherever possible; and the condition of the native churches and Christians dealt with. 'All the more detailed information thus obtained,' says the editor, 'supported by the evidence of documents which have fallen into the hands of the allied troops, and all that the diplomatic proceedings at Peking have revealed, confirm the previous conviction that the Chinese Government was solely responsible for the Boxer rising of last year.' One strikingly interesting section of this record of suffering, borne with Christian courage and resignation, is that devoted to the last letters of some of the martyrs. We have no space for quotations from these touching epistles, but must refer readers to the volume itself, which, while containing many sad scenes and incidents, is yet full of comfort and consolation for surviving relatives and friends. In a word, this is a book the reading of which cannot fail to be profitable. The illustrations, consisting of portraits, views of places and incidents, mostly from photographs, are admirably reproduced, and the volume is beautifully printed and handsomely bound.

From Messrs. Netherton & Worth, Truro.—'Modern English Biography: containing many thousand concise Memoirs of Persons who have died since the Year 1850, with an Index of the most Interesting Matter,' by Frederic Boase. Volume III., R to Z. With this instalment Mr. Boase's work comes to an end. Throughout he has displayed an industry and zeal which have insured a very interesting and valuable production, if in some respects it can scarcely be pronounced quite satisfactory. An examination of its contents shows that it brings into prominence a number of people, political, literary, military, artistic, legal, dramatic, commercial, sporting, and journalistic, whose biographies have never been brought between the same covers before. Among the publishers in the present volume we note the names of Lovell Augustus Reeve, James Leech Ridgway, Francis and John Rivington, George Routledge, John Saunders, R. B. Seeley, William Simpkin, John Nicholas Trübner, George and James Spent Virtue, Henry Richard Vizetelly, John Weale, and Joseph and Joseph Vernon Whitaker. Not the least valuable feature in the book is the index, which enables the reader to find the special information he may be in search of with the least amount of trouble to himself. The printing of Mr. Boase's work is not exactly everything one could wish, and occasionally the thought may arise that too much attention is devoted to secondary celebrities, more especially in the dramatic and sporting worlds; but, taken in its entirety, it is full of interest and useful information.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'Studies of the Man Paul,' by Robert E. Speer. The aim of this little book, to use the words of the author, is 'to study as far as possible the man himself, the personality of Paul.' The work is primarily intended for Bible students, and the various chapters are divided into sections and numbered divisions for the convenience of class instruction. Critical comment is for the most part avoided, and every endeavour has manifestly been made to render the volume as helpful and practical as possible. The greater portion of the book refers to the intellectual attainments of the Apostle and his moral qualities. It is of American origin.

From the Sign of the Unicorn.—'Constable,' by C. J. Holmes. Mr. Laurence Binyon, the editor of the useful 'Artist's Library' issued by this firm, has done well to include as the fifth volume of the series a monograph on Constable, the great painter of landscape, who, as Mr. Holmes remarks, 'stands at the parting of the ways between the old masters and the moderns.' Mr. Holmes's work is distinguished and illuminating, and though not of sufficient length to be exhaustive it yet sheds much new light on Constable's technique and mode of painting. At the end of the volume twenty-four reproductions of different pictures by the artist are given, and they are invaluable in illustrating Mr. Holmes's remarks and giving them point and lucidity.

From Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co., Ltd.—'Recent Object Lessons in Penal

Science,' by A. R. Whiteway, M.A. Two series of 'object lessons,' published in 1898 and 1900 respectively, have already been written by Mr. Whiteway and issued by this firm, and both are now out of print; this speaks well for their popularity. The present series is extremely useful and written in careful, scientific and judicious language. Mr. Whiteway is a barrister-at-law, and is an authority on all matters connected with penology. The following are some of the chapter-headings: 'The State v. the Criminal,' 'The Betterment of the Criminal,' 'Imprisonment,' 'The Moral Hospital for Immoral Patients.' The book is not intended for the uneducated; it presupposes some elementary knowledge of criminology, and there are many references to scientists, judges, moralists, lawyers, &c., which will puzzle those who have given no time to the study of prison-life and law.

From Messrs. J. & T. Spencer, Leicester. 'Spencer's Illustrated Leicester Almanack,' 1902. Besides the matter usually contained in such publications, 'Spencer's Illustrated Leicester Almanack' contains a variety of articles, many of them excellently illustrated, including tales and stories and articles on interesting buildings or places in or near Leicester. It also includes a Peerage, Baronetage, and Knightage of the county of Leicester, and useful information relative to the public institutions and governing bodies of the borough and county. In fact, it overflows with entertaining and instructive reading and is altogether a marvellous production for the low price at which it is published.

From Mr. Arthur H. Stockwell.—'What Non-conformists Stand For,' by the Rev. J. Hirst Hollowell. This is the first volume of the 'Free Church Library,' a series of volumes by 'leading preachers in all the Free Churches.' It sets forth in very able fashion the considerations that have induced the Nonconformists to detach themselves from the State Church and the tenets of their faith. The followers of all forms of religion will derive considerable benefit from reading this book, for it will explain the causes of Dissent.

From Messrs. Anthony Treherne & Co.—'From Downs to Shires,' by R. Alwyn. We have been unable to read this hunting novel, which strikes us as being badly written and singularly empty and flat. A sporting friend of ours, however, finished it with the remark that it was 'not half bad'; perhaps we are too critical, and, after all, our friend may be right.

From Messrs. J. Whitaker & Sons, Ltd.—'Whitaker's Peerage for the Year 1902: being a Directory of Titled Persons.' This issue of an extremely useful work shows many improvements over its predecessors. Special attention has been paid to the colonial, missionary, and retired bishops, and the missionary bishops have been placed under their titular dioceses; but references will also be found, as in the case of all other prelates, under their surnames. The particulars relating to native Indian knights and second heirs have been thoroughly overhauled and revised, and in other respects the Directory has been extended and improved. In the introduction there is of course much new matter occasioned by the accession of his present Majesty, and new sections will be found upon the subjects of foreign titles held in the British dominions and upon the titles and names of native Indian knights; also an alphabetical index to the Three Rolls of the Peers, the peerages extinct since the death of George III., a list of the Roman Catholic Lords, an Historic Baronetage, and a table of the Officers of Arms. The index to the seats and residences mentioned in the Directory—which, with the supplementary addresses, forms the concluding portion of the work—has been entirely rewritten and reprinted. In thus indicating the changes and improvements that have been effected in the sixth annual issue of a book which is rapidly assuming something of the importance attached to its older and companion work, the Almanac, we desire to express our cordial appreciation of the efforts evidently made to keep it thoroughly up to date and in every way accurate and reliable.

From Mr. Effingham Wilson.—'County Court Practice made Easy, or Debt Collection Simplified,' by a Solicitor. The character of this work is sufficiently explained by the title. It is a well written, highly practical little treatise which should be found of great service by 'the struggling man of business with doubtful debts upon his books, the solicitor's clerk anxious to please his principal, and the young solicitor having little experience in county-court procedure'—a trio to whom the book is dedicated.

From Messrs. John Wright & Co., Bristol.—'Ideal Health and how to attain it; a Guide to Health and Strength,' by Alexander Bryce, M.D., D.P.H. (Cantab.), with illustrations from Life by R. J. Williams. We are disposed to agree with the writer of this book when he says that whilst physical culture is absolutely necessary, and of the greatest value in the prevention and cure of many chronic ailments, in these days exercise is being overdone, and that much energy is wasted and time spent in methods which are damaging rather than advantageous. There is doubtless much truth in this remark. Now-a-days physical training seems in a fair way of becoming the be-all and end-all of existence. At any rate the training of the intellect is put into the background. Dr. Bryce lays great stress on the value of chest expansion, recommending for that purpose the use of Terry's Spring Chest Exerciser, which seems the principal feature differentiating this from other manuals of physical culture. There are excellent rules for dietary and exercise contained in this guide, which is calculated to benefit those who have scant opportunity for out-door exercise.

NEW EDITIONS.—Messrs. Dawbarn & Ward have issued a second edition, revised and enlarged, and with four photogravure plates, of 'Shakespeare's Town and Times,' by H. Snowden Ward and Catherine Weed Ward. Apart from the interest of the text, which is very considerable, the book is rendered exceedingly attractive by the many beautiful illustrations which depict scenes in connection with the poet's life, portraits, statues, &c. The new photogravure plates are 'Shakespeare's Tomb on Shakespeare's Day,' 'On Avon's Bank near Tiddington,' 'The Hathaway House, Shottery,' and 'Shakespeare's Memorial and Trinity Church.' They are very finely reproduced from photographs taken by Catherine Weed Ward. Several additional illustrations are also introduced into the text.—We have received from Messrs. Greening & Co. a copy of the second edition of 'God in Shakespeare: the Course of the Poet's Spiritual Life with his Reflections thereon and his Resultant Conception of his World-Personality inductively established from his Text,' by Charles Downing (Clelia), a work that attracted considerable attention on its first production. This issue contains a special preface 'to meet preconceptions and misconceptions.'—Mr. Effingham Wilson has published a fifth edition of that useful little work, 'Banks and their Customers,' by Henry Warren, which tells the public in rather startling fashion how these institutions are managed, and by what dubious methods they contrive to pay a large dividend to their shareholders.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

BOOKS WANTEDREGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

IMPORTANT

ALL who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the

Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

ESTABLISHED 1837

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following :—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of the most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some HUNDREDS OF OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

GRIPPED. By SILAS K. HOCKING.

LARGE EDITION of 10,000 COPIES.

Crown 8vo. 3s. 6d.
[Ready early March.]

IMPORTANT NEW STORY.

With Original Illustrations by J. GILLINGHAM.

Mr. Hocking has here broken new ground and produced what is probably his strongest work. It abounds in dramatic situations, and the mystery upon which the story mainly turns is well maintained, and with it the reader's interest to the end.

'It is no matter of wonder that Mr. Silas K. Hocking's books have sold by the million, for he is a born story-teller. Moreover, he tells his stories in simple, direct, and homely language, yet with a vigour that holds the reader as a spell.'—LITERARY WORLD.

OTHER MEN'S MINDS.

EDITED BY THE

Rev. E. DAVIES, D.D.

NEW EDITION,
SEVEN THOUSAND CHOICE EXTRACTS.

Medium 8vo. cloth gilt,
3s. 6d.

Extracts on History, Science, Philosophy, Religion, &c. Selected from the Standard Authors of Ancient and Modern Times, and Classified in Alphabetical Order.

'Every page glistens with gems of purest water, which cannot fail to attract and benefit their possessor.'—DAILY NEWS.
'As an example of painstaking research, and a judicious and well-chosen selection from standard authors, it stands unique.'—ADVERTISER.

DIET AGE AND ACTIVITY. By Sir HENRY THOMPSON.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION, With APPENDIX.

Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

The TIMES says: 'We can only hope that many of our readers will not only follow the precepts which it contains, and the principles which it inculcates, but that they will also rival Sir Henry himself in realising the advantages which observance of his teaching will afford.'

The LANCET says: 'The book is not one for medical men alone; it is not at all technical, and may be read with much advantage by everyone who has attained the age of 50 years and wishes to reach the ninth decade in fair health and activity.'

FOOD AND FEEDING. By Sir HENRY THOMPSON.

ELEVENTH REVISED EDITION.

Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 5s.

'Joining his unique experience as a distinguished medical man with his wide knowledge as a connoisseur of how food ought to be cooked, Sir Henry Thompson presents for the information and guidance of the public a book, the value and importance of which cannot be over-estimated. It is written in a bright and conversational style that commends it to every sort of reader, and contains a mass of interesting matter that those who desire to live well, and at the same time wisely, should lose no time in assimilating. Five shillings laid out in this way will go far to exorcise the demon indigestion.'—PALL MALL GAZETTE.

HOME DOCTORING. By W. B. KESTIVEN, M.D., F.R.C.S.

A GUIDE to DOMESTIC MEDICINE and SURGERY.

Crown 8vo. cloth, 1s.

NEW EDITION.

WITH ILLUSTRATIONS AND DIAGRAMS.

'The book is a sterling little medical dictionary of useful hints.'—LLOYD'S.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.
So many accidents and ailments constantly happen both in and out of reach of professional aid, that to know how to deal safely with them, especially under the latter circumstances, is to possess no small advantage. The power of knowledge is here given to abate suffering and to prolong life, if the means be wisely used. The wise use of these means is to a large extent within the reach of those who have not had special professional training.

DEEP-LEVEL MINES OF THE RAND

CONSIDERED FROM THE COMMERCIAL POINT OF VIEW

BY

G. A. DENNY (of Johannesburg)

MEMBER OF THE NORTH OF ENGLAND INSTITUTE OF MINING AND MECHANICAL ENGINEERS, OF THE LONDON INSTITUTE OF MINING AND METALLURGY, OF THE SOUTH AFRICAN ASSOCIATION OF ENGINEERS, OF THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF MINING ENGINEERS, AND OF THE AUSTRALASIAN INSTITUTE OF MINING ENGINEERS.

CONSULTING ENGINEER TO THE GENERAL MINING AND FINANCE CORPORATION, LIMITED, OF LONDON, BERLIN, PARIS, AND JOHANNESBURG.

EXTRACT FROM AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

'In the light of the experience of the past on the Witwatersrand Goldfields, and in view of the present proportions of an industry which had its beginning only some thirteen years ago—and in view, also, of the lessons of potential development and expansion which it teaches—one feels lost in a maze of magnificent promise. . . .

'To the writer's mind, the future of these Fields is bound up with the exploration and development of the Deeper Levels of the Main Reef series; and while not losing sight of the very ample room for expansion still available on the Outcrop Mines, where ores of a low grade prevail, he believes that this latter will be a matter of quite secondary importance in comparison with the probable development in the Deep-levels, in districts where the Outcrop Mines have proved the most remunerative. He therefore confines himself in this volume to the consideration of the future of the Deep-level Mines of the Rand.

'The object he has in view is not to discuss issues pertaining to Deep-level Mining from a scientific standpoint, but rather to disclose the bearing they have upon the Gold Mining Industry in its commercial aspect. For this reason, technicality has, as far as possible, been avoided, and the various subjects which are treated will be found (it is hoped) dealt with here in a manner which will be clear not only to the Engineer, but to the reader whose training has been purely Commercial.

Broadland Sport

This Book will be profusely Illustrated by a Series of upwards of 150 Drawings and Photographs, and will be printed from new type on super calendered paper specially manufactured for the Book.

Medium 8vo. cloth extra, 12s. 6d. net.

Also an EDITION DE LUXE, printed on art paper (and the type distributed), with Frontispiece and numerous Full-page Plates in Photogravure, limited to 100 Copies, each numbered and signed by the Author, price £2. 2s. net.

For those more particularly devoted to East Anglian Sport, the book should supply a long-felt want, as although a great many volumes have been written and published dealing with the Norfolk Broads, never before has there been issued a work dealing wholly with the Sports and Pastimes of this most interesting locality.

A special feature of the work will be found in the chapters on Yachting, which trace its origin and gradual development, and give the fullest particulars of every boat of any importance launched during the past 100 years; the rise and success or fall of every Yacht Club; the originators and supporters of Yacht Racing; the Owners of Racing Yachts and all about them.
